In the history of the Church, there have been a number of saints and martyrs that possessed an extraordinary measure of the gift of healing. As the Lord had instructed the Twelve, “Freely you have received, freely give” (Matthew 10:8), those coming later followed the same example and refused to accept payment for their services. This became surprising since many of the unmercenary healers were physicians by trade.

The Orthodox Church today has a healing service called “The Sacrament of Holy Oil.” It is used infrequently and privately. Its theme comes from the mission of the Twelve Apostles who performed their healing accompanied by the anointing of oil (Mark 6:13, James 5:14).

During the Holy Oil service, the names of some of the Unmercenary Healers are mentioned by way of the example of their prayers. Those mentioned are listed in Table I. Other healers are mentioned as part of the Sunday Matins commemoration; these are listed in Table II. Appendix I contains a list of other healers that are well-known for their work.

One will note that all these healers are post-Apostolic. The earliest of the group, Thekla of Iconium, was a convert of the Apostle Paul, but did most of her work in the late 1st and early 2nd Century. Also, all of them were celibate and most were martyrs. Except for Irene, the only non-martyrs lived after peace came to the Church in the 4th Century.

In the lives of these healers, there are a number of themes that are illustrated by the Scripture readings that have been chosen for their feast days.

The Apostolic Work of Healing

Many miracles accompanied the work of the Twelve and the Seventy in their various missionary journeys. This was true both when they were first sent out by the Lord (Matthew 10:8, Luke 10:9, 17), later on after Pentecost (Acts 3:1-8, 5:15-16, 9:39-42) and wherever they went on their missionary journeys. Paul joined them later and performed similar miracles: “God performed unusual miracles by the hands of Paul so that even handkerchiefs or aprons were brought from his body to the sick, and the diseases left them and the evil spirits went out of them” (Acts 19:11, 12). Paul refers to this: He did not come to Corinth “with persuasive words of human wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power” (1 Corinthians 2:4).

The Gospel readings for the feast days of some of the Unmercenary Healers have similar themes. For example, the feast days for Cyrus and John, Cosmas & Damian of Asia and Cosmas & Damian of Rome use Matthew 10:1, 5-8 which is the account of the sending out of the Twelve. The feast days for the Apostles Luke and Tryphon of the Seventy use Luke 10:16-21, which is the account of the return of the Seventy.

Both with the Twelve and the Seventy, there was extensive conflict with the forces of Satan. They were both instructed to heal the sick and cast out demons (Matthew 10:8, Luke 10:9, 17), and the Twelve were given the additional authority to raise the dead (Matthew 10:8). Commenting on this conflict at the return of the Seventy, the Lord said, “I saw Satan fall like lightning from heaven. Behold I give you the authority to trample on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing shall by any means hurt you” (Luke 10:18, 19).

John Cassian classified<sup>2</sup> healing into three different classes in decreasing order of effectiveness. (1) Healing done by holy men and women. (2) Healing done by the faith of caretakers or by the sick themselves. There are many limitations on those involved. (3) Faked healing done by demons.

“The first is indeed for the sake of healing when the grace of signs accompanies certain elect and righteous men on account of the merits of their holiness. For example, the Lord said, ‘Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, and cast out demons. Freely you have received, freely give’” (Matthew 10:8).

“The second is for edification of the Church and proceeds from either the faith of those who bring the sick or from those who are to be cured. “The virtue of health proceeds even from sinners and men unworthy of it. Of whom the Savior says, ‘Many shall say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Your Name, and in Your Name cast out devils, and in Your Name done many mighty works? And then I will confess to them, I never knew you. Depart from Me, you workers of iniquity’ (Matthew 7:21-23). If the faith of those who bring the sick or if the faith of the sick is lacking, it prevents those on whom the gifts of healing are conferred from receiving the healing. For example, Mark said, ‘And Jesus could not do any mighty works there because of their unbelief.’ (Mark 6:5-6). The Lord Himself said, ‘Many lepers were in Israel in the days of Elisha the prophet, and none of them was cleansed but Naaman the Syrian’” (Luke 4:27).

“The third class of healing is copied by the deceit and contrivance of demons. When a man who is regarded as a saint and a servant of God is enslaved to sins, men may be persuaded to copy his sins out of admiration for his miracles. Thus an opening is made for objections and the sanctity of the Faith may be brought into disgrace. Or else he who believes that he possesses the gift of healing may be puffed up by pride of heart and so fall more grievously. When the names are invoked of those who have no merits of holiness or any spiritual fruits, the demons pretend that by their merits they are disturbed and made to flee from the bodies they have possessed. Moses had said, ‘If there rise up in the midst of you a prophet, or one who says he has seen a dream, and declare a sign and a wonder. And that which he has spoken comes to pass, and he says to you: Let us go and follow after other gods whom you do not know, and let us serve them. You shall not hear the words of that prophet or of that dreamer, for the Lord your God is tempting you that it may appear whether you love Him or not with all your heart and with all your soul’ (Deuteronomy 13:1-3). The Lord said, ‘There shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall give great signs and wonders, so that, if it were possible, even the elect should be led astray’” (Matthew 24:24).

Hatred by the World

As one can expect, there was a reaction by the world to the work of the Apostles and the Unmercenary Healers. Just as all of the Twelve except John died the death of a martyr, so did many of the Unmercenary Healers. The reason for this is explained in the Gospel reading for the feast day of some of the Unmercenary Healers, such as Panteleimon and Haralampos (John 15:7-16:2). This reading addresses the hatred of the world in response to their work. This hatred is a very passionate, but often totally illogical hatred. How can one logically hate people who go around healing their fellow men for free?

Usually it was the civil authorities and seemingly good people that were behind the hatred and martyrdom of the Apostles and the Unmercenary Healers. But why would seemingly good people persecute the righteous? This is something that occurs today also, and this is described in the above Gospel reading. In the case of the Lord and the Twelve, it was the Jewish leaders or King Herod (trying to please the Jewish leaders). This was not the underbelly of Jewish society but the leaders who were respected and who upheld the law -- seemingly good people. There was a dark side to this, however. The Lord pointed out that there was considerable hypocrisy involved regarding the Jewish leaders (Matthew 23). And the Jewish historian, Josephus, describes in chapter after chapter the sordid, scheming, homicidal family life of the Herods. But most people didn't see this side of it; it seemed like good people were persecuting the righteous.

The Lord said, "If the world hates you, know that it hated Me before it hated you" (John 15:18). Because Christ and the Twelve were not of the world, they were hated by the world (John 15:19). Because they were of the Father (John 17:11, 12) and the ruler of this world hated the Father, they were hated by the world. This then led to persecution of the Lord and the Twelve by the world. In the centuries that followed, the same thing applied to the Unmercenary Healers: they stood out very dramatically as being of the Father.

This same Gospel lesson is used for the warrior-martyrs Demetrios of Thessalonica and George of Cappadocia. For a more detailed discussion of this, see the study for October 26 on the feast day of Demetrios and George.

The Purpose of Suffering<sup>3</sup>

One of the Epistle readings for the Unmercenary Healers is 2 Timothy 2:1-10. This is used for Panteleimon (Table I), Haralampos (Table II) and Laurence (Appendix I) as well as for the warrior-martyrs Demetrios and George. Paul penned his last words before his martyrdom in encouraging Timothy to continue the Apostolic work that he was called to. Paul wrote that he himself had "finished the race" and that "his departure (i.e. martyrdom) was at hand" (2 Timothy 4:6,7). Sometime earlier, Paul had established Timothy as Bishop of Ephesus (1 Timothy 1:3), and his encouragements to Timothy were:

- Be strong in the Grace that is in Christ Jesus (2 Timothy 2:1).
- The things you heard from me, commit to faithful men who will be able to teach others also (2 Timothy 2:2).
- You must endure hardship as a good soldier of Christ Jesus (2 Timothy 2:3).

<sup>3</sup> For more discussion on the purpose of suffering, see the Epistle lesson for the Feast Day of Demetrios and George.

Why should Timothy, Paul, the Lord, the Twelve and the Unmercenary Healers have to suffer? The answer is that they do this for the sake of those who follow them in the Faith. They help others to see what is beyond this life and what really matters.

John Chrysostom made<sup>4</sup> some analogies. Wounded soldiers who recover are an encouragement to their fellow soldiers; so holy men and women who bear up patiently under persecution are an encouragement to the Church.

“In war, the Captain who sees his General wounded and recovered again, is much encouraged. Thus it produces some consolation to the faithful, that the Apostle Paul should have been exposed to great suffering and not rendered weak by the utmost of them. Timothy heard that Paul, who possessed so great powers (see Acts 19:11-12), was a prisoner and afflicted, yet was not impatient or discontented on the desertion of his friends. Timothy, if ever exposed to the same sufferings himself, would not consider that it proceeded from human weakness, nor from being a disciple, nor because he was inferior to Paul, but that all this happened in the natural course of things. For if Paul endured these things, much more Timothy ought to be able to bear them.”

In this regard, the Lord had said, “A disciple is not above his teacher, nor a servant above his master. If they have called the Master of the house ‘Beelzebub’, how much more will they call those of His household” (Matthew 10:24).

Chrysostom added<sup>5</sup> that Timothy knew where the battle lines were drawn and that “we do not wrestle against flesh and blood” (Ephesians 6:12). Paul said to stand firm not to depress Timothy but to excite him.

“Be sober therefore, he means, and watch; have the Grace of the Lord cooperating with you, and aiding you in the contest; contribute your own part with much cheerfulness and resolution”. When we go to watch a wrestling match today, we don’t go there in depression, but with excitement to root for our favorite contestant. In the same vein, we are all contestants in a larger wrestling match where the angels and saints are cheering for us.

Chrysostom concluded<sup>6</sup> with a very fitting example: a comparison of the Emperor Nero with the Apostle Paul, where it was Nero who had Paul beheaded. Even though Nero had all the power, he couldn’t stop Paul from proclaiming the Word. Nero had all the honor from the world; Paul had none. Yet at the Second Coming of Christ, this situation will be reversed.

“Nero had the glory of this world; Paul had the dishonor of this world. Nero was a tyrant who had great success, many trophies, wealth overflowing, numerous armies, the greater part of the world in his sway, the Senate crouching to him and a splendid palace to live in. When he went out, he was arrayed in gold and precious stones and was surrounded by guards and attendants. When he sat down, he was clothed in robes of purple. He was called lord of land and sea, Emperor, King and other high-sounding names. Even wise men, potentates and sovereigns trembled at him for he was said to be a cruel and violent man. He wished to be thought of as a god, and he despised both all the idols and the very God Who is over all.”

“Now in opposition to him, let us consider Paul, a Cilician, a tent-maker, a poor man, unskilled in the wisdom of Rome, knowing the Hebrew language, which was especially despised by the Italians. He was a man that often lived in hunger, often went to bed without food, a man that didn’t have clothes to put on, often in cold and nakedness (2 Corinthians 11:27). Paul was cast into prison by Nero himself, confined with robbers, impostors, grave-robbers and murderers, and scourged as a malefactor. Yet (in the 4th Century), the greater part of the world had never heard of Nero while Paul is daily celebrated among Greeks, Barbarians, Scythians and those who inhabit the extremities of the earth. No one knows where Nero’s grave<sup>7</sup> is, while the tent-maker occupies the midst of the city<sup>8</sup> as if he were a king and living.”

“Yet let us consider what the case was when Paul was in chains, dragged bound from prison, while Nero was clothed in purple and walked out from a palace. Nero, with armies at his command, said, ‘Do not disseminate the Word of God!’ Paul said, ‘I cannot stop, the Word of God is not chained!’ (2 Timothy 2:9) Thus the Cilician, the prisoner, the poor tent-maker, who lived in hunger, despised the rich Roman emperor with all his armies. He that was in chains was a conqueror; he that was in a purple robe was conquered. A single man defeated the Emperor and his armies. The surrounding multitudes were all slaves of Nero, yet they admired not their lord but him who was superior to their lord.”

“And yet I am but praising the lion for his claws, when I ought to be speaking of his real honors. How will Paul come in shining garments with the King of Heaven? How will Nero stand then, mournful and dejected? Let us, my beloved children, be imitators of Paul, not in his faith only, but in his life, that we may attain to heavenly glory, and trample upon that glory that is here”.

Doing Battle with Demons

Sickness of all kinds is related to activities of demons<sup>9</sup> that try to discredit God and turn man away from God. For example, the Patriarch Job was the most righteous man of his day, yet Satan demanded, and received, permission to afflict Job with very painful diseases. It was so bad that Job’s own wife advised her husband to just “curse God and die” (Job 2:9). Another example of the connection between demons and sickness is the healing of various physical ailments by merely casting out the demon, who brought on the ailment. This occurred for the blind and mute demoniac (Matthew 12:22), the mute demoniac (Matthew 9:32-33) and the epileptic demoniac (Matthew 17:14-18, Mark 9:17-27, Luke 9:38-42).

<sup>7</sup> See <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nero>. When Nero was about to be overthrown, he committed suicide and was buried in the Mausoleum of the Domitii Ahenobarbi, in what is now the Villa Borghese (Pincian Hill) area of Rome.

<sup>9</sup> For more details on the relationship of sickness to demoniac activity, see the Gospel lesson for the 6th Sunday of Luke

If sickness is demon-related, then the Apostles and the Unmercenary Healers are likely to incur a great deal of demonic wrath by their work. It should be no surprise, then, that many of the Apostles and the Unmercenary Healers died as martyrs.

One of the traditional activities of many ascetics for the last 2,000 years has been to withdraw from society in order to do battle with demons, either in seclusion or in company with other ascetics. Again, it should be no surprise that all or most of the Unmercenary Healers were also ascetics.

Exposing the World for What It Is

Another aspect of the Apostolic work performed by the Unmercenary Healers is illustrated by the Epistle reading for Thekla of Iconium (Table II). This reading, 2 Timothy 3:10-15, is also used for the Sunday of the Pharisee and the Publican prior to Lent, which can be consulted for more details on this topic.

Paul begins by referring to Jannes and Jambres, the Egyptian magicians who resisted Moses. Paul stated “these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, disapproved concerning the Faith. They will progress no further, for their folly will be manifest to all, as theirs (i.e. Jannes’ and Jambres’) also was” (2 Timothy 3:8, 9).

Paul comments that people will come into contact with Timothy who are lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God and who have a form of piety but deny its power. Like Jannes and Jambres, they will have corrupt minds [having the characteristics described in 2 Timothy 3:2-4, 1 Timothy 6:3-5] and will resist the Truth. In verse 13, Paul refers to them as “evil men and impostors...deceiving and being deceived.” Yet, Paul says, they will advance no farther, for their folly will be manifest to all as was that of Jannes and Jambres when Egypt was destroyed by the plagues and in the Red Sea (v.9).

John Chrysostom points out that this may seem contradictory, since Paul had just said, “They will increase to more ungodliness” (2 Timothy 2:16). “He there means that beginning to innovate and deceive, they will not pause in their error but will always invent new deceits and corrupt doctrines, for error is never stationary. But here (2 Timothy 3:9), he says that they shall not be able to deceive, nor carry men away with them; for however at first they may seem to impose upon them, they will soon be easily detected”. “For their folly, will be manifest to all, as (Jannes’ and Jambres’) also was” (2 Timothy 3:9). For if errors flourish at first, they do not continue to the end. For so it is with things that are not attractive by nature, but attractive in appearance; they flourish for a time, then are detected and come to nothing. But not such are our doctrines, and of these, you (Timothy) are a witness. For in our doctrines there is no deceit, for who would choose to die for a deceit?” (Homily VIII on 2 Timothy 3).

But there is a partially hidden agenda here. The key is in verse 12, “All who desire to live piously in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution” (i.e. like Moses and like Paul himself). The Lord spelled out the reasons for this in John 15:18-16:4: some people simply hate God! Jesus said, “If the world hates you, you know that it hated Me before it hated you”, and “if they persecuted Me, they will also persecute you. If they kept My word, they will keep yours also” (John 15:18, 20).

And why does the world hate God? Because He exposes its inadequacy just as Moses and Aaron exposed the inadequacy and impotence of the secret arts of Jannes and Jambres.

This happens to us also, without our even trying. Jesus said, “If anyone loves Me, he will keep My Word; and My Father will love him and We will come to him and make our abode with him. He who does not love Me does not keep My words...” (John 14:23-24). The world, on the other hand, loves the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life (John 2:5-17). By loving God, we testify that all this is passing away and is inadequate and impotent - whether we say anything or not! The Unmercenary Healers made this contrast very obvious.

THE LOVE OF GOD IN THE BODY OF CHRIST

A major characteristic of the lives of the Unmercenary Healers is a vivid demonstration of the love of God, but always within the Body of Christ, which is the Church.

What is the Body of Christ?

Paul speaks of the Trinity as One Spirit, One Lord and One God and Father of all (Ephesians 4:4-6). Interspersed between these references to the Trinity are the references to one body, one faith and one baptism; the result is that God the Father is above all, through all and in all. The glue that holds all this together is love (Ephesians 4:2). Chrysostom comments, "The love which Paul requires of us is no common love, but that which cements us together and makes us cleave inseparably to one another; it accomplishes as great and as perfect a union as though it were between limb and limb" (Homily XI on Ephesians 4). One of the most intimate moments of this union occurs as the Body of Christ (the Church) meets to worship her Lord and Head and partakes of the Body and Blood of Christ in the Lord's Supper. This is a great mystery: how the body of Christ partakes of the body of Christ.

Chrysostom refers to the Body of Christ as, "the faithful throughout the whole world, both which are, and which have been, and which shall be. And again, they that before Christ's coming who pleased God are 'one body' also, because they knew Christ. 'Your father Abraham rejoiced to see My day, and he saw it and was glad' (John 8:56). And again, 'If you had believed Moses, you would have believed Me, for he wrote of Me' (John 5:46). And the prophets, too, would not have written of One of whom they knew not what they said. They both knew Him and worshipped Him. Thus they were also 'one body' " (Homily X on Ephesians 4).

In order to establish and promote this union, each one of us was given Grace according to the measure of Christ's gift to us (v.7). These gifts, such as apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, etc., are for the equipping of the saints for the work of (literally) deaconing and for the building up of the Body of Christ (Ephesians 4:11, 12, 16). These gifts have their purposes listed as follows:

- That we all come to the Unity of the Faith and knowledge of the Son of God (Ephesians 4:13).
- That we all come to a Perfect Man (Ephesians 4:13). This is the New Man referred to elsewhere (Ephesians 2:15, 4:24).
- That we all come to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ (Ephesians 4:13).
- That the truth of this might be preserved in spite of deceitful attempts to undo it (Ephesians 4:14).
- That the whole body might grow up in love with every part of the body doing its share, being joined and knit together with every joint supplying (Ephesians 4:15, 16).

Thus, all the gifts are directed toward an unselfish end as directed by the Head of the Body.

The members of the Body of Christ are the elect of God, are holy and beloved, (Colossians 3:12) and are sanctified by the Spirit according to the foreknowledge (Greek prognosis = before + knowledge) of God (1 Peter 1:2).

It behooves us therefore to bear with one another and forgive one another (Colossians 3:13) by putting on (v.12):

- tender mercies
- kindness
- humility
- meekness
- long suffering

An illustration of how we do this in everyday life comes from the way we treat the different limbs of our own body. If our eye has a speck in it, the other members of the body treat the eye tenderly, kindly and with long suffering until the speck has been removed.

By doing so, we put on love (Colossians 3:14) which is the greatest of the gifts of God (1 Corinthians 12:31-13:13) and is the bond of perfection. John Chrysostom referred to love as the rigging ropes of a sailing ship and the ligaments of an arm or leg. It ties things together and makes the sails or the arm functional; without it the sails or the arm would be useless (Homily VIII on Colossians 3). Love also covers a multitude of sins and weakness in the Body (1 Peter 4:8). Isaac of Syria put it this way: "Let our compassion be a mirror where we may see in ourselves that likeness and true image which belongs to the Divine nature and Divine essence" (Directions on Spiritual Training, Text 85). In other words, let us love as God loves.

Cyril of Alexandria, quoting Isaiah, saw the Body of Christ, the Church, as a lofty mountain: "The blessed Prophet Isaiah introduced those who by faith in Christ have been won unto life, as calling out eagerly unto one another, and saying: 'Come, let us go unto the mountain of the Lord, and unto the house of the God of Jacob, and He shall teach us His way, and we will walk in it' (Isaiah 2:3 LXX). Now by the mountain here we affirm to be meant not any earthly mountain, for to imagine this would be foolish, but rather the church which Christ has rescued for Himself. For it is high and conspicuous to people everywhere, and exalted, because there is nothing in it which brings men down to earth. For those who dwell within it care nothing for the things of earth, but rather desire those things that are above" (Homily 112 on Luke 10).

Demonstrating the Love of God

Revision C

Epistle: 1 Corinthians 12:27-13:8
Galatians 5:22-6:2

Unmercenary Healers Demonstrate the Love of God

The Epistle reading for the feast days of Cosmas and Damian of Asia, Cyrus and John (Table I), and Cosmas and Damian of Rome (Appendix I) is 1 Corinthians 12:27-13:8. In this reading, Paul advises the Corinthians to earnestly desire the greater gifts (v.31) where he listed the gift of Apostle first (v.28).

John Chrysostom stated that Paul listed the gift of Apostle first in honor since they had all the gifts plus an abundance of love for their fellow man. Chrysostom defined workers of miracles (1 Corinthians 12:29) as having the power both to punish and to heal, whereas the gift of healing (1 Corinthians 12:30) involved cures only. Yet Paul listed both of these after prophets and teachers. This was for two reasons: (1) Miracles and healings are done for the sake of teaching. (2) Teachers teach by word and by their life; miracle workers and healers may possibly have a corrupt life. As examples, Chrysostom listed Judas Iscariot (John 12:6) and those at the Judgment who are dismayed at being rejected even though they worked miracles in Jesus' name (Matthew 7:22, 23). Chrysostom also noted that Paul always listed the gift of tongues last since this was being used for selfish purposes (1 Corinthians 14:4-14) and not for edifying the brethren (Homily xxxii on 1 Corinthians 12).

Yet Paul also pointed out "a more excellent way": whether one has the gift of:

- Tongues: speaking to men or angels (v.1)
- Prophecy: understanding all mysteries and knowledge (v.2)
- Faith: able to move mountains (v.2)
- Asceticism: selling everything to feed the poor (v.3)
- Martyrdom: giving up ourself to be burned (v.3)

If one doesn't have love, it profits one nothing. The more excellent way is love because love makes us able to handle and direct the other gifts without pride or arrogance, and love gives us a vision beyond this present life.

From the Epistle reading, love:

- Suffers long and is kind (v.4)
- Does not envy (v.4)
- Does not parade itself, is not puffed up (v.4)
- Does not behave rudely (v.5)
- Does not seek its own (v.5)

- Is not provoked (v.5)
- Thinks no evil (v.5)
- Does not rejoice in iniquity; rejoices in the truth (v.6)
- Bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things (v.7)
- Never fails (v.8)

These characteristics of love apply very well to the Unmercenary Healers, especially to those that were physicians by trade but wouldn't take any payment for their work. For details on the lives of some of the Unmercenary Healers, see Appendix II which contains a brief summary from the Prologue of those listed in Tables I and II.

The Lord had stated that the greatest love was that of martyrdom, "Greater love has no man than this, than to lay down one's life for his friends" (John 15:13). Yet Paul points out that even martyrdom ("thought I give my body to be burned", v.3) without love profits me nothing. If love for one's fellow man can be thought of as a way of life, then our way of life is more important than any of the gifts of the Spirit. A pure life can lead to salvation; but as the example of Judas and the unrighteous miracle-workers at the Judgment show, the gifts of the Spirit don't guarantee that one will escape punishment. The testimony of the Unmercenary Healers is that they had a righteous life, filled with love for their fellow man.

In the First Century, perhaps more commonly than today, many people gave up all their goods to feed the poor (v.3). An example of this is the early church in Jerusalem where "all who believed were together, and had all things in common, and sold their possessions and goods, and divided them among all, as anyone had need" (Acts 3:44, 45). This included Barnabas, who sold his land (which included property near the Mount of Olives) and brought the money and laid it at the Apostles' feet (Acts 4:34-37). Ananias and Sapphira did this also, but without love similar to Judas, and paid dearly (Acts 5:1-10).

John Chrysostom commented on this kind of love as follows: "If love were truly observed, there would be neither slave nor free, neither ruler nor ruled, neither rich nor poor, neither small nor great. Nor would any devil then ever have been known. For sooner would grass endure the application of fire than the devil the flame of love. Love is stronger than any wall, is firmer than any adamant; or if you can name any material stronger than this, the firmness of love transcends them all."

"Therefore Paul says that the love which we are speaking of is the mother of all good things, and he prefers it to miracles and all other gifts. For where there are vests and sandals of gold, we require some other garments by which to distinguish the king. But if we see the purple and the crown, we require not to see any other sign of his royalty. Similarly, when the crown of love is upon our head, it is enough to point out the genuine disciple of Christ; not to ourselves only, but to the unbelievers. For, 'by this', says He, 'all will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another' (John 13:35). So that this sign is greater surely than all signs, in that the disciple is recognized by it. For though anyone should work 10,000 signs, but be at strife one with another, they will be a scorn to the unbelievers. Just as if they do no signs, but love one another exactly, they will continue to be revered by all men" (Homily xxxii on 1 Corinthians 13).

Chrysostom continued to examine what makes up love, and to dissect what it is composed of. In enumerating this, he noted that Paul began with long-suffering (v.4), which Chrysostom called the root of self-denial. “A man that is long-suffering is of great understanding. By this we implement the Lord’s command of not returning evil for evil; by this we bless those who curse us and show love of our enemies” (cf Matthew 5:43-48). Yet one could have a love that is long-suffering and still be envious; if so, the envy would spoil the excellency of the love (Homily xxxiii on 1 Corinthians 13).

Further, one could have a deep love for one’s fellow man which includes kindness and long-suffering, yet continually parade this virtue and be puffed up over it. Perfect love, however, does not allow pride to swell up in this manner.

Love also does not behave unseemly (literally shapelessly, compare 1 Corinthians 7:36). Chrysostom phrased it this way: “In suffering the most shameful things for him whom she loves, love does not ever count the things an unseemliness. She does not even entertain any sense at all of the shame. For the lovers of money endure all manner of reproaches for the sake of that sordid traffic of theirs. Far from hiding their faces, they even exult in it. Much more will he that has love refuse nothing whatsoever for the safety’s sake of those whom he loves. Nothing that he can suffer will shame him.”

“For our Lord Jesus was both spit upon and beaten with rods by pitiful slaves; not only did he not count it an unseemliness, but he even exulted and called the thing glory. In discoursing with a harlot, when the by-standers all accused Him (Luke 7:37-39), He counted the thing not only not to be disgraceful, but allowed her to kiss His feet, wash His body with her tears, and wipe them with her hair; and all this amid a company of spectators who were His enemies” (Ibid.).

Paul had earlier said, “Let no one seek his own good, but each one the others’ good” (1 Corinthians 10:24). Here Paul repeats that aspect of love: “love does not seek its own way” (1 Corinthians 13:5). Chrysostom added, “For your own profit lies in the profit of your neighbor, and his in yours. This is as if one had his own gold buried in the house of his neighbor; should he refuse to go and there look for it and dig it up, he will never see it. So likewise, he that will not seek his own profit in the advantage of his neighbor will not attain the crowns due to this” (Ibid.).

The context in which Paul wrote these things was a church where self-centeredness was prevalent. At the love feast<sup>10</sup> that accompanied the Lord’s Supper, “each one takes his own supper ahead of others, and one is hungry and another is drunk” (1 Corinthians 11:21). During the worship, many spoke in tongues, just edifying themselves (1 Corinthians 14:4); Paul encouraged them to seek to edify the Church instead of just themselves (1 Corinthians 14:12).

The Church in Corinth also had a number of factions, some following Peter, some Apollos, some Paul and some claiming to follow just Christ (1 Corinthians 1:12). This undoubtedly caused many disagreements because of their lack of love for each other. Thus Paul added to the characteristics of love by saying that love “is not provoked and does not even think evil” (1 Corinthians 13:5). If one did not even suspect or think anything amiss in one’s brothers, the disagreements and factions would not occur.

<sup>10</sup> In the 1st Century, Churches imitated the original Lord’s Supper, and served it with a meal. Because of problems such as occurred at Corinth, this was changed so that people might be able to discern the Lord’s body and blood better.

Paul also said that love “does not rejoice in iniquity, but rejoices in the truth” (1 Corinthians 13:6). Paul amplified on this in his Epistle to the Romans, which he wrote a few months after writing 2 Corinthians: “Rejoice with those who rejoice and weep with those who weep. Be of the same mind toward one another. Do not set your mind on high things, but associate with the humble. Do not be wise in your own opinion. Repay no one evil for evil. Have regard for good things in the sight of all men. If it is possible, as much as depends on you, live peaceably with all men” (Romans 12:15-18).

Paul concluded this characterization of what is love by saying that love “bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things and never fails” (1 Corinthians 13:7, 8). As an example of this, Chrysostom pointed to King David in his dealing with his rebellious son Absalom: “For what could be more intolerable than to see a son rising up against him, aiming for usurping the throne and thirsting for his father’s blood? Yet this did that blessed one (David) endure such that he could not bear to throw out one bitter expression against the parricide. But even when he left all the rest to his captains, he gave a strong injunction respecting Absalom’s safety (2 Samuel 15-18). For strong was the foundation of his love” (Ibid.)

In the case of Absalom, David bore all things, believed all things, hoped all things and endured all things even though Absalom might have been characterized as worthless, and was certainly considered such by David’s commander, Joab (2 Samuel 18:9-18, 1 Kings 2:1-6, 28-34). “For love does not merely hope but also believes from its great affection. And even if these good things should not turn out according to its hope, but the other person should prove yet more intolerable, it bears even these things. For love endures all things” (Ibid.)

Paul counseled the Thessalonians regarding those who refused to receive his words: “Do not keep company with him that he may be ashamed. Yet do not count him as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother” (2 Thessalonians 3:14, 15). Chrysostom added, “For it is the work of the devil to tear us apart from one another, and he has used great diligence to take away love that he may cut off the way of correction. Thus he may retain him in error and you in enmity, and block the way of his salvation. For when the physician hates the sick man and leaves, and the sick man turns away from the physician, when will the distempered person be restored? Do you turn away from him because he is ungodly? For this cause you ought to welcome and attend to him, that you may raise him up in his sickness. Even if he is incurably sick, still you have been bidden to do your part. Judas was incurably sick yet God did not refuse to continue attending to him. Wherefore, neither should you grow weary. For even if after much labor you fail to deliver him from his ungodliness, yet you shall receive the deliverer’s reward. And you will cause him to wonder at your gentleness, and so all this praise will pass on to God. For though you should work wonders and raise the dead and whatever work you do, the heathen will never wonder at you as much as when they see you displaying a meek, gentle, mild disposition. And this is no small achievement, since many will even be entirely delivered from their evil way; there is nothing that has such power to draw men as love.

Bearing One Another's Burdens

The Corinthians were not the only ones Paul wrote to concerning how love bears all things (1 Corinthians 13:7). He also wrote of this to the Galatians and the Colossians, and the sections where Paul discussed bearing one another's burdens (Galatians 5:22-6:2; Colossians 3:12-16) are used as the Epistle lessons for six of the healers listed in Appendix I: Pachomius, David of Thessalonica, Cyriacus, Daniel the Stylite, and both Simeon Stylites. In Galatians, Paul listed this along with other "fruits of the Spirit" such as love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness and self-control. In Colossians, Paul linked this with forgiving one another by putting on tender mercies, kindness, humility, meekness and long-suffering (Colossians 3:12, 13). After all, this is what the Body of Christ is all about and this is what we are called to (Colossians 3:15).

This brings up a faith-works issue. These "fruits of the Spirit" are things that we do as a result of our faith. As James said, "Faith was working together with works and by works, faith was made perfect" (James 2:22). In the case of the Unmercenary Healers, they performed great miracles which would lead us to expect that they had great faith. As the Lord said, "If you have faith (the size of) a mustard seed, you will say to this mountain, 'move from here to there', and it will move; and nothing will be impossible for you" (Matthew 17:20).

John Chrysostom pointed out that Paul mentioned the flesh "those who are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires" (Galatians 5:24); and also the Spirit, "if we live in the spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit" (Galatians 5:25). What is the place, then, of the soul? "The mastery of the passions belongs to her and concerns her (the soul). Being placid amid vice and virtue, if she has used the body fitly, she has wrought it to be spiritual. But if she separate from the Spirit and give herself up to evil desires, she makes herself more earthly. You observe throughout that Paul's discourse does not relate to the substance of the flesh, but to moral choices, that which is or is not vice. He refers to 'the fruit of the spirit' (Galatians 5:22) because evil works originate in ourselves alone and therefore he calls them 'works'. But good works require not only our diligence but God's loving kindness" (Commentary on Galatians 5). Knowing the Scriptures is part of this, "that the man of God may be complete, thoroughly equipped for every good work" (2 Timothy 3:17). "For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared beforehand that we should walk in them" (Ephesians 2:10).

Another example of good works is illustrated by the Epistle lesson for Sampson the Hospitable (Table I). This Epistle lesson, 2 Corinthians 9:6-11, is also used for the 18th Sunday after Pentecost and aptly illustrates the life of Sampson. Born of wealthy parents and trained as a physician, he gave away his wealth and lived very simply as an Unmercenary Healer. As this Epistle lesson describes, Sampson was a cheerful giver who sowed abundantly, and therefore will reap abundantly of treasure in heaven (2 Corinthians 9:6, 7, Matthew 19:21, Mark 10:21, Luke 12:33). For more details on this see the Epistle lesson for the 18th Sunday after Pentecost.

Preparation for the Lord's Return

Revision C

Gospel: Luke 12:32-40

Unmercenary Healers Prepare for the Lord's Return

While the passions and desires of the flesh tend to hinder us from a close walk with God and Paul encouraged us to live and walk in the Spirit (Galatians 5:24, 25) the Lord also encouraged us to be ever mindful of His return in glory. The Gospel lesson for the 6th Century Unmercenary Healer, Sampson the Hospitable, illustrates this spirit of watchfulness. In this Gospel lesson, Luke 12:32-40, the Lord began with the Parable of the Rich Fool (Luke 12:13-21). For a detailed discussion of this, see the Gospel lesson for the 9th Sunday of Luke. Then He spoke of the birds and the flowers and living very simply; for further discussion of this, see the Gospel lesson for the 3rd Sunday after Pentecost.

With these as background, the Lord began the Gospel lesson with “Do not fear, little flock, for it is the Father’s good pleasure to give you the kingdom” (Luke 12:32). He then went on to give some specific things we can do to get ready. These include:

- Sell what you have and give alms; this is treasure in heaven (v.33).
- Where your treasure is, there your heart will be also (v.34).
- Be ready to depart; let your waist be girded and your lamps be burning (v.35).
- Be like men who wait for their master returning from the wedding (v.36).
- Blessed are those servants whom the master will find watching when He comes (v.37).
- Be ready, for the Son of Man is coming like a thief in the night at an hour you do not expect (v.40).

A similar theme is used for the Gospel lesson for Thekla, a First Century Unmercenary Healer (Table II). Thekla was a convert of the Apostle Paul in Iconium and spent most of her life living in a cave near Seleucia (which is near Antioch). She had been born into a wealthy family, but gave that up to concentrate on the things of God. The Gospel lesson used for her Feast Day is Matthew 25:1-13, and Parable of the Five Wise and Five Foolish Virgins. The theme is, again, preparation as if one is awaiting his Master’s return from the wedding. This parable was used along with the Parable of the Talents (Matthew 25:14-30) to introduce the Lord’s discussion of the Judgment of Works (Matthew 25:31-46). For more discussion on this, see the Gospel lessons for the 16th Sunday after Pentecost and Meatfare Sunday prior to Lent.

Living Simply and Without Covetousness

A distinguishing characteristic of all the Unmercenary Healers is the simple life they led. Many came from positions of wealth, but they followed the Lord’s instructions and gave it away in order to live more simply. The point of this is not just to be poor, but to avoid covetousness. As Cyril of Alexandria (4th Century) put it, “In teaching His disciples not to be covetous of wealth, He also withdraws them from worldly anxiety, and from vain toils and luxury and splendor of attire, and whatsoever evil habits follow upon these things. And He bids them rather courageously to be earnest in the pursuit of this simple life” (Homily 91 on Luke). Compared to the Kingdom of Heaven which “it is the Father’s good pleasure to give us” (Luke 12:32), everything else pales in comparison. For “eye has not seen nor ear heard, nor have entered into the heart of man, the things which God has prepared for those who love Him” (1 Corinthians 2:9, Isaiah 64:4).

Cyril made an analogy to purchasing a house: “Suppose one of us wanted to sell a very beautifully built house and one of you who had plenty of gold were to conceive the desire of purchasing it. Would you not feel pleasure in buying it, and readily give the money that was laid up in your coffers, and even add to this with other money on loan? The transaction would not expose you to loss, but rather the expectation of your future gains would make you in a flutter of joy.”

“Similar to this, the God of all offers to sell you Paradise. There you will reap eternal life, unending joy and an honorable and glorious habitation. Once there, right blessed will you be, and will reign with Christ. Draw near, therefore, with eagerness and purchase the estate. With these earthly things obtain things eternal; give that which abides not and gain that which is secure; give these earthly things and win that which is in heaven; give that which you must leave, even against your will, that you may not lose things hereafter; lend to God your wealth that you may be really rich.”

“And besides it is a very absurd thing, that while we often entrust men of probity with our earthly wealth, and feel no fear lest any loss should result from our confidence in the uprightness of those who receive it, yet we will not trust it to God, who receives from us these earthly things, as a loan, and promises to give us things eternal, and that with interest. ‘For good measure’ He says, ‘pressed down, shaken together and running over will be put into your bosom’ (Luke 6:38). For the measure to run over is a direct proof of its great abundance. Pleasure-loving wealth chains the human mind in indolence toward all that is good, and stretches out, so to speak, a stiff and haughty neck against God. For it yields not itself to that yoke which would lead it to piety” (Ibid.)

Watchfulness

Watchfulness was compared to having our waist girded and our lamp burning (Luke 12:35). In the First Century, people wore long flowing robes. If one were to take time off and relax, one would unfasten the belt around his waist. But going back to work, he would put the belt back on so that his clothes didn’t hinder his work. Similarly, an oil lamp would be left burning all night while everyone slept, but the wick would be trimmed down to give a dim light, and also burn less fuel. But when one was awake, the lamp would be trimmed bright. This was the problem faced by the five foolish virgins when the bridegroom came: they didn’t have enough oil to allow the lamp to burn brightly (Matthew 25:1-13).

Cyril interpreted the girding of the loins as “the readiness of the mind to labor industriously in every thing praiseworthy. For such as apply themselves to bodily labors, and are engaged in strenuous toil, have their loins girt”. The lamp, Cyril said, represents “the wakefulness of the mind and intellectual cheerfulness. And we say that the human mind is awake when it repels any tendency to slumber off into that carelessness which often is the means of bringing it into subjection to every kind of wickedness. Being sunk in stupor, the heavenly light within it is liable to be endangered from a violent and impetuous blast of wind” (Homily 92 on Luke).

At the Exodus from Egypt, the nation of Israel was commanded that as they ate the Passover meal, they were to eat “with their loins girded, their sandals on their feet and their staff in their hand” (Exodus 12:11). Normally one ate with his belt off, his sandals by the door and his staff outside. The Passover, however, was a state of watchfulness because the gods of Egypt were to be judged that night (Exodus 12:12).

The Apostle Peter also encourages a state of readiness: “The Day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in which the heavens will pass away with a great noise, and the elements will melt with fervent heat; both the earth and the works that are in it will be burned up. Therefore, since all these things will be dissolved, what manner of persons ought you to be in holy conduct and godliness, looking for and hastening the coming of the Day of God? Therefore, beloved, looking forward to these things, be diligent to be found by Him in peace, without spot and blameless (2 Peter 3:10, 11, 14).

The Gospel lesson also referred to different watches: “And if He should come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, and find them (watching), blessed are those servants” (Luke 12:38). Why should the Lord omit the first watch? This requires a little insight. Cyril comments on that as follows: “Observe, I pray, the breadth of the divine gentleness, and the bountifulness of His mildness towards us. For He knows our frame and the readiness with which man’s mind wanders into sin. He knows that the power of fleshly lust tyrannizes over us, and that the distractions of this world even, so to speak, against our will drag us on by force, leading the mind into all that is unseemly. But in that He is good, He does not leave us to despair, but on the contrary, pities us, and has given us repentance as the medicine of salvation. For this reason, He says, that whether He come in the second watch, or whether He come in the third watch, and find them so doing, blessed are they. Now the meaning of this you will certainly wish to understand clearly. Men, therefore, divide the night into three or four watches. For the sentinels on city walls, who watch the motions of the enemy, after being on guard three or four hours, deliver over the watch and guard to others. So with us there are three ages: the first, that in which we are still children; the second, in which we are young men; and the third, that in which we come to old age. Now the first of these, in which we are still children, is not called to account by God, but is deemed worthy of pardon, because of the imbecility as yet of the mind, and the weakness of the understanding. But the second and the third, the periods of manhood and old age, owe to God obedience and piety of life, according to His good pleasure. Whosoever, therefore, is found watching, and, so to speak, well girt, whether, if it so chance, he be still a young man, or one who has arrived at old age, blessed shall he be. For he shall be counted worthy of attaining to Christ’s promises (Ibid.)

The Apostle Paul spent a great deal of time in watchfulness, fasting and prayer. Even though it was difficult, he did it for the joy of the kingdom of God. For example, five times he was given 39 lashes, three times he was beaten with rods, once he was stoned and left for dead, three times he was in a ship wreck, spending a night and a day adrift at sea. Not to mention the intrigue of robbers, bounty hunters and false brethren, he was often up all night watching, hungry, thirsty, cold and poorly clad (2 Corinthians 11:24-27).

Paul described his reasons for doing all this earlier; “For we who live are always delivered to death for Jesus’ sake, that the life of Jesus also may be manifested in our mortal flesh. So then death is working in us, but life in you. For all things are for your sakes, that grace, having spread through the many may cause thanksgiving to abound to the glory of God. Therefore we do not lose heart. Even though our outward man is perishing, yet the inward man is being renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, is working for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory” (2 Corinthians 4:11-17). The above passage is used as the Epistle lesson for the feast days of the Unmercenary Healers Menas (Table II), Euthymius and Alypius the Stylite (Appendix I).

Watchfulness requires work and dedication. This is what James, the Lord’s brother, referred to when he said, “Do you see that faith was working together with his works, and by works faith was made perfect? You see then that a man is justified by works, and not by faith only” (James 2:22, 24). The Unmercenary Healers worked hard at their calling. But yet they also remembered the Lord’s words: “Come to me, all you who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you and learn from Me, for I am gentle and lowly in heart, and you will find rest for your souls. For My yoke is easy and My burden is light” (Matthew 11:28-30). The preceding quote from Matthew 11 is used as the Gospel lesson for the Unmercenary Healers. Euthymius (5th Century) and Sergius of Radonezh (14th Century).

APPENDIX II
LIVES OF UNMERCENARY HEALERS
FROM TABLES I AND II

Cyrus and John, January 31 These compassionate and wonderful saints were not blood-brothers, but were brothers in spirit. Cyrus lived at first in Alexandria, and working as a doctor, healed people by the power of Christ together with medicine for the body. Discovering that illness came upon people mainly through sin, he always told them to cleanse their souls from sin by repentance and prayer, that they might be restored and strengthened in body. When Diocletian began his persecution of Christians, Cyrus went off to Arabia, where he received the monastic habit. But, as he had become known in Alexandria, so he became known also in Arabia, and people went to him for help. John, hearing of him and being at that time a Roman officer in Edessa, came to Arabia to see Cyrus. On seeing each other, they loved each other as brothers and remained together to live in asceticism. At that time, a Christian woman called Athanasia was tortured together with her three daughters in the town of Canopus. Cyrus and John heard of this, and came to Canopus to encourage the mother and daughters not to fall back from the Faith. And, grateful indeed for the counsel of these saints, Athanasia endured all the tortures and, with her daughters, was slain for Christ. The daughters were: Theoctista, age 15, Theodota age 13 and Eudocia age 11. Then the torturers took Cyrus and John and, after torture and imprisonment, slew them with the sword in the year 311. These holy martyrs performed innumerable miracles, both during their lives and after their death. Their relics were translated to Rome in the time of the Emperor Arcadius. They are invoked for help especially for the sleepless and for the blessing of water and food.

Cosmas and Damian of Asia, November 1 Unmercenary and wonderworkers, they were brothers in the flesh and in the spirit, born somewhere in Asia of a pagan father and a Christian mother. After their father's death, their mother Theodota devoted all her time and energy to the bringing-up of her sons as true Christians. God helped her, and her sons grew as two choice fruits and as two holy lamps. They were skilled in medicine and ministered to the sick without payment, and so fulfilled Christ's command: "Freely have ye received; freely give" (Matthew 10:8). They were so strict in their unpaid ministry to men that Cosmas became greatly enraged with his brother Damian when he took three eggs from a woman, Palladia, and gave orders that, after his death, he should not be buried with his brother. In fact, holy Damian had not taken those eggs as a reward for healing Palladia's sickness, but because she had sworn by the Most Holy Trinity that he should have them. However, after their death in Fereman, they were buried together in obedience to a revelation from God. These two holy brothers were great wonderworkers both during their lifetime and after their death. A farm laborer, on lying down to sleep at one time, was attacked by a snake, which entwined itself around his mouth and stomach. This poor man would have breathed his last in the greatest torment had he not at the last moment invoked the help of Cosmas and Damian. Thus the Lord glorified forever by miracles those who glorified Him here on earth by their faith, purity and mercy.

Panteleimon, July 27 Born in Nicomedia of a Christian mother, Eubula, and a pagan father, Eustorgius, he studied medicine as a young man. The priest Hermolaus befriended him, instructed him in the Christian faith and baptized him. Panteleimon miraculously healed a blind man whom other doctors had treated in vain: he healed him by the name of Christ and baptized him. From jealousy, the doctors denounced Panteleimon as a Christian, and he went before the Emperor Maximian for judgment. “He stood before the earthly ruler in the body, but in his mind he stood before the heavenly King.” He freely declared himself to be a Christian before the Emperor, and, in front of his eyes, healed a paralytic of a long infirmity. This miracle brought many of the pagans to the Christian faith. The Emperor put him to torture, but the Lord appeared to him on several occasions and delivered him whole and uninjured. Then Hermolaus suffered, along with Hermippus and Hermocrates. Condemned to death, Panteleimon knelt in prayer. At that, the executioner gave him a blow on the neck with his sword, and the sword broke as if made of wax. The executioner could not kill him until he had finished his prayer and had himself given the word to behead him. Panteleimon was beheaded under an olive tree, which after that became laden with fruit. “Panteleimon” means “all-merciful”. God the all-merciful received his righteous soul, and glorified him among His greatest saints, his relics remaining incorrupt. This wonderful martyr suffered with honor as a youth for Christ on July 27th, 304. Panteleimon is invoked in the prayers at the blessing of water and the blessing of oil, together with Hermolaus and the other unmercenaries and wonderworkers. The loveliest church dedicated to him is to be found on the Holy Mountain, Athos.

Hermolaus, July 26 He was a priest in Nicomedia in the time of the Emperor Maximian, and was with the twenty thousand martyrs condemned by the Emperor to be burned in their church (see December 28th). Hermolaus somehow escaped death on that occasion, together with two other priests, Hermippus and Hermocrates. Hermolaus baptized Panteleimon, with whom he was brought to trial, tortured and finally beheaded. Hermippus and Hermocrates suffered with them, and they were all crowned with wreaths of victory and glory in the Kingdom of Christ. They suffered with honor in about 304.

Sampson the Hospitable, June 27 This saint was born of rich and eminent parents in ancient Rome, where he studied all the secular wisdom of that time, devoting himself in particular to the study of medicine. Sampson was a compassionate and liberal physician, and gave the sick medicine for both soul and body, counseling each man to fulfill the requirements of the Christian faith. He moved to Constantinople, where he lived in a tiny house from which he distributed alms, comfort, advice, hope, medicine and all possible aid to those suffering in spirit and in body. The Patriarch heard of Sampson’s great virtue and ordained him priest. At that time the Emperor Justinian the Great became ill with what his doctors believed to be an incurable disease. The Emperor prayed with great fervor, and God revealed to him in his sleep that Sampson would heal him. When the Emperor summoned Sampson to court, the old man had only to put his hand on the diseased place and the Emperor was healed. When Justinian offered him an immense sum of money, Sampson thanked him but would accept nothing, saying to the Emperor: “O Emperor, I had silver and gold and other riches, but I left it all for the sake of Christ, that I might gain heavenly and eternal wealth.” When the Emperor insisted on doing something for him, Sampson asked him to build a home for the poor. In that home, Sampson cared for the poor as a father cares for his children. His compassion for the poor and weak was second nature to him. This holy man, filled with heavenly power and goodness, entered peacefully into rest on June 27th, 530. He was buried in the Church of the Holy Martyr Mocius, his kinsman.

Diomedes, August 16 A doctor from Tarsus of eminent parents, he taught the people the Christian faith as he healed them. The Emperor Diocletian ordered that he be beheaded in Nicaea in 298.

Those who beheaded him and took his head to the Emperor were blinded, and when they restored the head to his body, with prayer, they were healed.

Anicetas and Photius, August 12 The Emperor Diocletian at one time visited the city of Nicomedia with the evil intention of utterly exterminating the Christians there. But, when he began his merciless torture of the Christians, Anicetas, one of the governors of the city, presented himself before him and courageously confessed before the Emperor his faith in Christ the Lord, God incarnate in the flesh for our salvation. Anicetas also denounced the worship of idols as that of deaf and dumb stones, unworthily worshipped by ignorant men. The furious Emperor commanded that his tongue be cut out, but Anicetas, by the power of God, continued to speak. Then a lion was let loose on him, which fawned about him. At that moment, the Temple of Hercules fell down. Photius, a kinsman of Anicetas', seeing the wonders and his kinsman's endurance, embraced him, confessed that he himself was a Christian and cried out to the Emperor: "You should be ashamed, you idolater; your gods are nothing!" The Emperor ordered that he be beheaded immediately, but the executioner, lifting up his hand against Photius, gave himself a blow with his sword and died. After harsh torture, the two of them were thrown into prison, where they remained for three years. They were then taken out and thrown into an enormous burning furnace. Many other Christians, men, women and children, went into the flames voluntarily after them, and the prayers of the Christians were heard rising from the flames, thanking God for their death by martyrdom. They all suffered in about 305. Anicetas and Photius are invoked in the prayers at the blessing of oil and water.

Spiridon, Bishop of Tremithus, December 12 The island of Cyprus was both the birthplace of this famous saint, and the place in which he spent his life in the service of the Church. He was of simple farming stock, and remained simple and humble to the end of his days. He married young and had children, but, when his wife died, he devoted himself entirely to the service of God. He was chosen for his devotion as Bishop of Tremithus, and even as a bishop did not change his simple style of life, taking charge of his cattle himself and tilling his own land. He consumed very little of his own produce, giving the greater part to the poor. He performed great wonders by God's power, making rain fall in a drought, stopping the course of a river, raising several of the dead, healing the Emperor Constans of a grave sickness, seeing and hearing angels, foreseeing future events and penetrating the secrets of the human heart. He turned many to the true Faith, and did much else. He was present at the first Ecumenical Council in Nicaea in 325, and, by his simple and clear expositions of the Faith, as well as by convincing miracles, brought back many heretics to Orthodoxy. He dressed so simply that once, when he was invited by the Emperor to the imperial court, a soldier took him for a beggar and struck him a blow. The meek and guileless Spiridon turned him the other cheek. He glorified God with many miracles, and was of great aid both to individuals and the whole Church of God. He entered into rest in the Lord in 348.

Charalampus, February 10 This great saint was bishop in Magnesia, and suffered for Christ at the age of 113. When a violent persecution broke out under the Emperor Septimus Severus, the aged Charalampus did not hide from his persecutors, but freely and openly preached the Christian faith. He endured all tortures as though not in the body, and when they flayed the living flesh from him, the godly saint said to the Emperor's soldiers: "Thank you, my brethren, for scraping off the old body and renewing my soul for new and eternal life." He performed many wonders and brought many to the Faith. Even the Emperor's daughter, Gallina, repudiated the paganism of her father and became a Christian. Condemned to death and led to the place of execution, Charalampus raised his arms to heaven and prayed for all men, that God would give them bodily health and salvation of soul, and that He would grant them the fruits of the earth in abundance: “Lord, Thou knowest that men are flesh and blood; forgive them their sins and pour out Thy blessing on all.” After praying thus, the saintly elder gave his soul to God before the executioner had laid his sword to his neck. He suffered in 202. Gallina took his body and buried it.

Menas, November 11 An Egyptian by birth and a soldier by profession, Menas, as a true Christian, could not bear to look upon the foul offering of sacrifice to idols, so he left the army and the town, the society of men and everything else, and went to a deserted mountain. It was easier for Menas to live with the wild beasts than with pagans. One day, Menas looked from afar in spirit as a pagan festival in the town of Cotyaeus, then went to the town and, before them all, confessed his faith in Christ the living God, denouncing idolatry and paganism as falsehood and darkness. The governor of that town, one Pyrrhus, asked who and what he was. The saint replied: “My fatherland is Egypt; my name is Menas. I was an officer, but, seeing the worship of idols, I rejected your honors. I have come now to proclaim my Christ before you all as the living God, that He may reveal me as His servant in the Kingdom of God.” Hearing this, Pyrrhus put holy Menas to harsh torture. He was flogged, flayed with iron flails, burned with torches and tortured in many other ways, finally being beheaded. His body was burned to prevent Christians taking it, but they did succeed in rescuing some bits from the flames. They buried these remains with care, and they were later taken to Alexandria and buried there, a church being built over them. Means suffered in about 304, and entered into the Kingdom of Christ.

Eleutherius, December 15 A good fruit of a good tree, this wonderful saint had noble and eminent parents. He was born in Rome, where his father was in imperial service. His mother, Anthea, heard the Gospel from the great Apostle Paul himself, and was baptized by him. Being early left a widow, she entrusted her only son to the education and service of the Bishop of Rome, Anacletus. Seeing how greatly Eleutherius was gifted and illumined by the grace of God, the bishop ordained him deacon at the age of fifteen, priest at eighteen and bishop at twenty. Endowed by God with wisdom, he made up for what he lacked in years. This godly man was made bishop in Illyria, with his seat at Valona in Albania. He kept his flock like a good shepherd, adding to their number from day to day. The Emperor Hadrian, a persecutor of Christians, sent a commander, Felix, with soldiers, to seize Eleutherius and take him to Rome. When the furious Felix arrived in Valona and went into the church, and heard and saw God’s holy hierarch, his heart was suddenly changed and he became a Christian. Eleutherius baptized him and set off with him for Rome, as merrily as though he were going to a feast, not to trail and torture. The Emperor put the gently-born Eleutherius to harsh torture, flogging him, burning him on an iron grid, boiling him in pitch and burning him in a fiery furnace. But, by God’s power, Eleutherius was delivered from all these deadly torments. Seeing all this, Choribus the governor proclaimed that he himself was a Christian. Choribus was tortured and then beheaded, and so also blessed Felix. Finally, the imperial executioners cut off the honored head of Eleutherius. When his mother, holy Anthea, came and stood over the dead body of her son, she was also beheaded. Their bodies were taken to Valona, where Eleutherius glorifies the name of Christ to this day.

Catharine, November 24_ The daughter of King Constus, she lived with her mother in Alexandria after her father’s death. Her mother was secretly a Christian and, through her spiritual father, brought Catharine to the Christian faith. In a vision, Catharine received a ring from the Lord Jesus Himself as a sign of her betrothal to Him. This ring remains on her finger to this day. Catharine was greatly gifted by God, exceptionally well-educated in Greek philosophy, medicine, rhetoric and logic, and added great physical beauty to this. When the wicked Emperor Maxentius offered sacrifice to idols and ordered everyone to do the same, Catharine came with daring before him and denounced his idolatrous errors. The Emperor, seeing that she surpassed him in wisdom and learning, summoned fifty of the wisest men, to dispute with her about faith and put her to shame, but Catharine was wiser than they, and put them to shame. The furious Emperor commanded that all fifty wise men be burned. These wise men, at Catharine's prayers, all confessed the name of Christ at the moment of death, and proclaimed themselves Christians. When the martyr was in prison, she brought Porphyrius the general, with two hundred of his soldiers, to the Faith, and also the Empress, Augusta-Vasilissa. They all suffered for Christ. At Catharine's martyrdom, an angel of God appeared to her, stopping and breaking the wheel on which she was being tortured, and after that the Lord Christ Himself appeared to her, strengthening her. After many tortures, Catharine was beheaded with the sword at the age of eighteen, on November 24th, 310.

Thecla, Equal to the Apostles, September 24 Thecla was born in Iconium of eminent pagan parents. She was betrothed at the age of eighteen to a young man, at the time that the Apostle Paul came to Iconium with Barnabas to preach the Gospel. Listening to Paul for three days and nights, Thecla turned utterly to the Christian faith and vowed to live in virginity. Her mother, seeing that she shunned her betrothed and thought no more of marriage, first talked to her and then beat her and starved her. Finally, she gave her over to the judges and demanded, wicked mother that she was, that Thecla be burned. The judge threw her into the flames, but God preserved her unharmed. Thecla then became a follower of the Apostle Paul, and went with him to Antioch. Attracted by Thecla's beauty, an elder of the city attempted to take her by force, but Thecla tore herself out of his grasp. The elder denounced her to the governor as a Christian who was averse to marriage. The governor condemned her to death and threw her to the wild beasts, but the animals would not touch the body of this holy virgin. Amazed at this, the governor asked: "Who are you, and what is the power that you have in you, that nothing can do you harm?" Thecla replied: "I am a servant of the living God." Then the governor let her go free, and she began to preach the Gospel and succeeded in bringing many to the true Faith, among whom was an eminent and honored widow, Tryphena. After this, Thecla, with the blessing of the Apostle Paul, withdrew to a solitary place near Seleucia. She lived a long time there in asceticism, healing the sick with miraculous power and in this way bringing many to Christianity. The doctors in Seleucia were jealous of her and sent some young men to assault her, hoping that, in losing her virginity, she would lose also her miraculous power. Thecla fled from these insolent young men and, when she saw that they would catch her, prayed to God for help in front of a rock, and the rock opened and hid the holy maiden and bride of Christ. This rock was her hiding-place and her tomb. Chrysostom says of this wonderful Christian heroine and saint: "I seem to see this blessed virgin going to Christ with virginity in one hand and martyrdom in the other."

Paraskeva, July 26 Born in Rome of Christian parents, she was brought up from her earliest youth in the Christian faith and gave herself wholeheartedly to the fulfilling of God's commandments in her life. She brought others to the Way by means of her true and deep faith and devout life. When her parents died, Paraskeva gave all her goods away to the poor and received the monastic habit. As a nun, she preached the truth of Christ with ever more burning zeal, not hiding from anyone, even though the Christian faith was at that time subject to bloody persecution by the Roman authorities. Wicked Jews denounced Paraskeva for preaching a forbidden faith, and she was brought to trial before the Emperor Antoninus. All the Emperor's flattery was unavailing in shaking the faith of this servant of God. She was then put to torture by fire, and a white-hot helmet was placed on her head, but God saved her miraculously and she escaped and left Rome. She again began to go from city to city, there to bring the pagan people to the true Faith. In two more cities she was brought before princes and judges, and tortured for her Lord, performing on these occasions great miracles by the power of God and quickly recovering from her wounds. The pagans, as ever, called her miracles magic, and ascribed her recovery to the power and mercy of their gods. Paraskeva once said to a prince who was torturing her: "It is not your god, O Prince, who heals me, but my Christ, the true God." She was finally beheaded by a Prince Tarasius. Thus gloriously ended the fruitful life of this holy woman. Her relics were later taken to Constantinople. She suffered for Christ in the second century.

Irene, May 5 She lived in the Balkans in apostolic times, in the town of Magedon where her father Licinius was a governor of a small region. Some think that she was a Slav. She was born a pagan of pagan parents. Penelope - for that was her pagan name - learned the Christian faith from her teacher, Appelianus. St. Timothy, the disciple of the Apostle Paul, baptized her and her lady-in-waiting, and brought her a letter from the Apostle Paul to read. She infuriated her father by her refusal to marry, and he intended to torture her, but she brought him to Christianity in a miraculous way. She was tortured in different ways by four kings, other than her father, but God saved her through His angels. King Sedechias buried her up to the neck in a pit full of snakes and scorpions, but an angel of God neutralized the poison of the reptiles and preserved the holy maiden untouched. Then the same king attempted to saw her in two, but the saw broke against her body as against stone. This same king once again bound her to the wheel of a water-mill, then let the water in to drown her, but the water would not flow, but stood still, and the maiden remained whole and alive. King Sapor, Sedechias's son, shod her with nails, loaded a sack of sand onto her, put a bridle on her and commanded that she be led like an animal far outside the city. "Truly I am as a beast before Thee, O Lord!" said the holy martyr as she ran bridled behind her torturers. But an angel of God caused an earthquake, and the earth opened and swallowed up her tormentors. Surviving all these tortures, by which an enormous number of pagans were brought to Christianity, Irene went to the city of Kallinikos, where she preached the Christian faith. The local king, Numerian, tried to kill her, throwing her into three burning metal oxen one after the other. But the maiden was preserved and remained alive, and many saw and believed. The Eparch, Vaudon, took her to the city of Constantina, where he thought to kill her by putting her onto a burning grid. But this did not harm Irene, and many were brought to the true Faith. Finally, Irene came to the city of Mesembria, where the king killed her but God restored her to life. And the king, seeing this, together with many of the people, believed in Christ and was baptized. And thus Irene, by her sufferings and miracles, brought over 100,000 pagans to faith in Christ. At last she laid herself in a grave and commanded Appelianus to close it. After four days, when the grave was opened, her body was not in it. Thus God glorified forever the maiden and martyr Irene, who had sacrificed all and endured all, that God should be the more greatly glorified among men

Introduction

The Gospel lesson is one part of a series of teachings on the Kingdom of God (see below) that, except for the last two, is found only in Luke. This series contains a number of parables, events, and stories addressing various aspects of the Kingdom of God:

Luke 15	The Lost Sheep	Parable
Luke 15	The Lost Coin	Story
Luke 15	The Prodigal Son	Story
Luke 16	The Unjust Steward	Story
Luke 16	The Rich Man &amp; Lazarus
Luke 17	The Ten Lepers	Event
Luke 18	The Tenacious Widow	Parable
Luke 18	The Pharisee and the Publican	Parable
Luke 18, Matthew 19, Mark 10	The Rich Young Ruler	Event
Luke 18, Mark 10	The Blind Man of Jericho	Event

In this series, some are called parables, some aren’t. Parables are fictional “what-if” stories used to teach a moral lesson. Some of the stories in this series are not called parables, and since this one names Lazarus as a certain individual (rather than just “a poor man”), the implication is that this event actually happened.

This series of kingdom teachings from Luke took place in late 29 AD and early 30 AD as Jesus was on His way to Jerusalem knowing He would be crucified. Two of these lessons – The Prodigal Son and the Pharisee and the Publican – are used in the Eastern Church during the weeks just prior to Lent. The Prodigal Son lesson is also used in the West during Lent. In addition, the Eastern lectionary covers the Ten Lepers, the Rich Young Ruler and the Blind Man of Jericho on successive Sundays: the 12th, 13th and 14th Sundays of Luke. The other four are used as weekday readings in the Eastern lectionary.

The Gospel lesson describes a conversation between a man in Hades and one in Abraham's bosom. The rich man in Hades may not have done anything grossly immoral or evil in the eyes of the world, but, like many people in our affluent Western society today, he lived to please himself in any way he could; pleasure was his god. We Americans are similarly obsessed with entertainment and sensual gratification. We seek to be entertained every minute, thus preventing the silence that allows one to pray or commune with God. Yet we are indeed accountable to Him. Since he created us with free-will that we might respond to His great love for us, He beckons us to love Him with all our being and our neighbor (made in God's image) as we love ourselves.

The beggar, Lazarus, who had been helpless and in misery in this life, was carried to a place of great love, comfort and glory – sitting with Abraham in "Abraham's bosom". The Lord, who told this story also said that people from all over the world would thus sit down with Abraham, while those who were his physical children, but unbelieving, would be left out (Matthew 8:11-12). In contrast the rich man was in a state of torment due to great heat from a flame and very thirsty to say the least!

What is Abraham's Bosom and How Are Souls There?

Lazarus and the rich man (often called "Dives", which is Greek for "rich man") were both in Hades, which is the place of the dead. In Greek mythology, Hades was ruled by the Greek god Hades<sup>11</sup>. The deepest, darkest part of Hades was called "Tartarus". The Apostle Peter referred to Tartarus as being the place where the angels who sinned are kept. "God did not spare the angels who sinned, but consigning to Tartarus<sup>12</sup> in pits of gloom, delivered them kept for judgment" (2 Peter 2:4 Greek text).

In the story about Lazarus and Dives, Christ said, "The rich man also died and was buried. And being in torments in Hades, he lifted up his eyes and saw Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. Then he cried and said, 'Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame'" (Luke 16:22-24).

Two different interpretations from the Church Fathers are presented in this Study. The majority opinion is covered as follows, while the minority opinion is included as Appendix B.

What Souls Experience in Hades

Both Lazarus and Dives did not have a physical body; their physical bodies were still in whatever grave they were buried in. Yet the souls of both Lazarus and Dives were still alive and were aware of their surroundings. One might ask, “How can the soul of Dives feel torment without a body?” “How can the soul of Lazarus feel comfort without a body?” We are not told this, and these are some of the mysteries of hell.

Other mysteries of hell are: Dives has eyes as he looks up to see Abraham, even though he has just a soul, but no physical body. Dives speaks to Abraham, who he can see across a great gulf. Dives asks Abraham to send Lazarus, whom he despised in his life, to help cool his tongue. How is it possible for disembodied souls to experience such things that we might think only apply to bodies? We are not told a great deal about how this can happen.

Tertullian of Carthage addressed<sup>13</sup> the idea of Lazarus and Dives in Hades actually experiencing feelings such as comfort and torment. He stated that there must be something corporeal about the soul. The same argument applies to the angels who sinned and who are consigned to Tartarus. Angels are bodiless creatures, just like souls.

“In the Gospel itself there is the clearest evidence for the corporeal nature of the soul. In hell the soul of a certain man is in torment, punished in flames, suffering excruciating thirst, and imploring from the finger of a happier soul, for his tongue, the solace of a drop of water. Do you suppose that this end of the blessed poor man and the miserable rich man is only imaginary? Then why the name of Lazarus in this narrative, if the circumstance is not a real occurrence? But even if it is to be regarded as imaginary, it will still be a testimony to truth and reality. For unless the soul possessed corporeality, the image of a soul could not possibly contain a finger of a bodily substance; nor would the Scripture pretend a statement about the limbs of a body, if these had no existence. But what is that which is removed to Hades after the separation of the body; which is there detained; which is reserved until the day of judgment; to which Christ also, on dying, descended? I imagine it is the souls of the patriarchs. But why all this, if the soul is nothing in its subterranean abode? For nothing it certainly is, if it is not a bodily substance. For whatever is incorporeal is incapable of being kept and guarded in any way; it is also exempt from either punishment or refreshment. That must be a body, by which punishment and refreshment can be experienced. Therefore, whatever amount of punishment or refreshment the soul tastes in Hades, in its prison or lodging, in the fire or in Abraham’s bosom, it gives proof thereby of its own corporeality. For an incorporeal thing suffers nothing, not having that which makes it capable of suffering; else, if it has such capacity, it must be a bodily substance.”

Irenaeus of Lyons stated<sup>14</sup> that souls preserve the same form that the body had in this life so that they are recognizable in Hades. The souls remember what they did in their lifetime in the body.

“The Lord has taught with very great fullness, that souls not only continue to exist, but that they preserve the same form in their separate state as the body had to which they were adapted. They remember the deeds which they did in this state of existence, and from which they have now ceased, as is recorded in that narrative respecting the rich man and that Lazarus who found repose in the bosom of Abraham. In this account He states that Dives knew Lazarus after death, and Abraham in like manner, and that each one of these persons continued in his own proper position. Dives requested Lazarus to be sent to relieve him; Lazarus, on whom he did not formerly bestow even the crumbs which fell from his table. He tells us also of the answer given by Abraham, who was acquainted not only with what respected himself, but he knew Dives also. Dives enjoined those who did not wish to come into that place of torment to believe Moses and the prophets, and to receive the preaching of Him who was to rise again from the dead. By these things, then, it is plainly declared that souls continue to exist; that they do not pass from body to body; that they possess the form of a man, so that they may be recognized, and retain the memory of things in this world. Moreover, this tells us that the gift of prophecy was possessed by Abraham, and that each class of souls receives a habitation such as it has deserved, even before the judgment.”

Tertullian of Carthage pointed out<sup>15</sup> that the soul has eyes, ears, a finger, a tongue, etc. These the soul received at Creation, and these are what characterizes the human body and by these we are known.

“Regarding the figure of the human soul, you can well imagine that it is none other than the human form; indeed, none other than the shape of that body which each individual soul animates and moves about. This we may at once be induced to admit from contemplating man’s original formation. Carefully consider, after God had breathed upon the face of man the breath of life, and man had consequently become a living soul, surely that breath must have passed through the face into the interior structure. It spread itself throughout all the spaces of the body; and as soon as by the divine inspiration it had become condensed, it must have impressed itself on each internal feature. By this densifying process, there arose a fixing of the soul’s corporeity; and by the impression its figure was formed and molded. This is the inner man, different from the outer, but yet one in the twofold condition. It, too, has eyes and ears of its own, by means of which Paul must have heard and seen the Lord (2 Corinthians 12:2-4); it has, moreover all the other members of the body by the help of which it effects all processes of thinking and all activity in dreams. Thus, it happens that the rich man in hell has a tongue and poor Lazarus a finger and Abraham a bosom (Luke 16:23-24). By these features also the souls of the martyrs under the altar (Revelation 6:9) are distinguished and known. The soul indeed which in the beginning was associated with Adam’s body, which grew with its growth and was molded after its form proved to be the germ both of the entire substance of the human soul and of that part of creation.”

Tertullian of Carthage also described<sup>16</sup> how the soul needs to work in conjunction with the body of its flesh. The soul can think, will and desire, but it cannot accomplish any deeds without its body. At the Last Judgment, the whole man (body and soul) will be judged based on what the whole man has actually done. Souls in Hades are able to get a foretaste of what is in store for them at the Last Judgement, such as was the case with Dives and Lazarus.

“Some suppose that the flesh will have to be present at the final judgment, because otherwise the soul would be incapable of suffering pain or pleasure, as being incorporeal; for this is the common opinion. We, however, maintain, that the soul is corporeal, possessing a peculiar kind of solidity in its nature, such as enables it both to perceive and suffer. That souls are even now susceptible to torment and to blessing in Hades, though they have no body, and notwithstanding their separation from the flesh, is proved by the case of Lazarus. Someone may say: Since, then, the soul has a substance of its own, it will be sufficiently endowed with the ability to suffer and sense, so as not to require the presence of the flesh. No, no, is my reply. It will still need the flesh; not as being unable to feel anything without the help of the flesh, but because it is necessary that it should possess such a faculty along with the flesh. It has a sufficiency of its own for action, in so far as it likewise has a capacity for suffering. But the truth is, with respect to action, it labors under some amount of incapacity; for in its own nature it has simply the ability to think, to will, to desire, to dispose; for fully carrying out the purpose, it looks for the assistance of the flesh to actually do anything. In like manner, it also requires the conjunction of the flesh to endure suffering, in order that by its aid it may be as fully able to suffer, as without its assistance it was not fully able to act. With respect to those sins, such as concupiscence, thought, and wish, which it has a competency of its own to commit, it at once pays the penalty of them. If these were alone sufficient to constitute what it deserves without requiring the addition of deeds, the soul would suffice in itself to encounter the full responsibility of the judgment. The soul would be judged for those things in the doing of which it alone had possessed a sufficiency. Since deeds too are attached to what we deserve; and since deeds are affected by the flesh, it is no longer enough that the soul apart from the flesh be paid back with pleasure or pain for what are actually works of the flesh. The soul has a body of its own; although it has members of its own, these are insufficient for its full perception, just as they are also for its perfect action. Therefore, as it has acted in each instance, so proportionally does it suffer in Hades, being the first to taste of judgment as it was the first to induce to the commission of sin. But still it is waiting for the flesh in order that it may through the flesh also compensate for its deeds, inasmuch as it laid upon the flesh the execution of its own thoughts. This will be the process of that judgment which is postponed to the Last Great Day, in order that by the exhibition of the flesh the entire course of the divine vengeance may be accomplished. Besides, it is obvious that there would be no delaying to the end of time that doom which souls are already tasting in Hades, if it was destined for souls alone.”

Cyril of Jerusalem pointed out<sup>17</sup> that the soul still can have a strong effect on the body even after they are separated at death. Examples of this are a dead man being raised by merely touching the bones of Elisha, and the aprons worn by Paul being used to heal the sick.

“Many Scriptures testify to the Resurrection of the dead; for there are many other sayings on this matter. But now, by way of remembrance only, we will make a passing mention of the raising of Lazarus on the fourth day (John 11:39-44). Because of the shortness of the time, we will allude to the widow’s son also who was raised (Luke 7:12-16), and merely for the sake of reminding you, let me mention the ruler of the synagogue’s daughter (Luke 8:49-56). Don’t forget the rending of the rocks, and how there arose many bodies of the saints which slept, their graves having been opened (Matthew 27:51-53) at the Resurrection of Christ. But specially remember that Christ has been raised from the dead (1 Corinthians 15:20). I speak but in passing of Elijah, and the widow’s son whom he raised (1 Kings 17:17-24). Elisha also raised the dead twice; once in his lifetime, and once after his death. For when alive he wrought the resurrection by means of his own soul (2 Kings 4:16-37). Not the souls only of the just are honored, but also that it might be believed that in the bodies of the just there lies a power. The corpse which was cast into the sepulcher of Elisha, when it touched the bones of the prophet, he revived and stood on his feet (2 Kings 13:20-21); the dead body of the prophet did the work of the soul. That which was dead and buried gave life to the dead, and though it gave life, yet continued itself among the dead. Why? Lest if Elisha should rise again, the work should be ascribed to his soul alone; and to shew, that even though the soul is not present, a virtue resides in the body of the saints. This is because of the righteous soul which has for so many years dwelt in it and used it as its servant. Let us not foolishly disbelieve, as though this thing had not happened. If handkerchiefs and aprons, which are from outside the body, touching the bodies of the diseased, raised up the sick (Acts 19:11-12), how much more should the very body of the Prophet raise the dead?”

Cyprian of Carthage stated<sup>18</sup> that the punishments that souls suffer in Hades affect them most in the areas where they have sinned most. Thus, Dives suffers most in his tongue and mouth.

“Exaltation, puffing up, and arrogant and haughty boastfulness, spring not from the teaching of Christ who teaches humility, but from the spirit of Antichrist, whom the Lord rebukes by His prophet. ‘But you said in thine heart, I will go up to heaven, I will set my throne above the stars of heaven: I will sit on a lofty mount, on the lofty mountains toward the north. I will go up above the clouds: I will be like the Most High God. But now you shall go down to hell, even to the foundations of the earth. They that see you shall wonder at you’ (Isaiah 14:13-16 LXX). Scripture threatens a like punishment to such in another place, ‘For the day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and haughty, and upon every one that is high and towering, and they shall be brought down’ (Isaiah 2:12 LXX). By his mouth, therefore, and by his words, is every one at once betrayed; and whether he has Christ in his heart, or Antichrist, is discerned in his speaking, according to what the Lord says in His Gospel. ‘Brood of vipers! How can you, being evil, speak good things? For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks. A good man out of the good treasure of his heart brings forth good things, and an evil man out of the evil treasure brings forth evil things’ (Matthew 12:34-35). This describes that rich sinner who implores help from Lazarus, then laid in Abraham’s bosom, and established in a place of comfort, while he, writhing in torments, is consumed by the heats of burning flame. He suffers most punishment of all parts of his body in his mouth and his tongue, because doubtless in his mouth and his tongue he had most sinned.”

Christ Emptied Abraham’s Bosom at His Resurrection

Paul stated, “Therefore, He says: ‘When He ascended on high, He led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men’ (Psalm 68:18). Now this, ‘He ascended’ -- what does it mean but that He also first descended into the lower parts of the earth? He who descended is also the One who ascended far above all the heavens, that He might fill all things” (Ephesians 4:8-10).

Peter stated, “For Christ also suffered once for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh but made alive by the Spirit, by whom also He went and preached to the spirits in prison, who formerly were disobedient, when once the Divine longsuffering waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was being prepared, in which a few, that is, eight souls, were saved through water” (1 Peter 3:18-20).

The Stichera for Holy Saturday read as follows. In these stichera, Hades is personified as picturing what happened to the realm of Hades as a result of Christ’s Cross and Resurrection. These stichera refer to Abraham’s bosom, not to the “lower regions” where Dives was held. Occupants of the lower regions will not be released until Judgment Day when Christ returns.

Today, Hades cries out groaning: “I should not have accepted the man born of Mary. He came and destroyed my power. He shattered the gates of brass. As God He raised the souls I held captive”.
Glory to Your Cross and Resurrection, O Lord!

Today Hades cries out groaning: “My dominion has been shattered. I received a dead man as one of the dead but I could not prevail against Him. I had ruled the dead from all ages. Behold, He raises all, and I perish”.
Glory to Your Cross and Resurrection, O Lord!

Today, Hades cries out groaning: "My power has been trampled down. The shepherd is crucified and Adam is raised. I have been robbed of those I ruled. Those whom I swallowed in my strength, I have given up. He who was crucified has emptied the tombs. The power of death has been vanquished”.
Glory to Your Cross and Resurrection, O Lord!

Thus, we can say that Christ descended into Hades after His Crucifixion, and that he pulled some of the residents of Hades out. Some of these even seem to include those who were disobedient before the Deluge of the days of Noah, and perhaps didn't know any better or were not going along with the Nephilim (Genesis 6:4).

Clement of Alexandria interpreted<sup>19</sup> Peter's first Epistle to say that Christ preached the Gospel to the souls of those who died in the Deluge in the days of Noah. We might ask how it was possible for these souls to repent? Clement compares this to the repentance of the 3000 on Pentecost, where they had just recently crucified Christ in ignorance. This may imply that those pre-Deluge souls were in the Abraham's Bosom part of Hades and not in the flames with Dives and also that they were not part of the Nephilim (Genesis 6:4) before the Deluge.

"The Lord preached the Gospel to those in Hades. Accordingly, the Scripture says, 'Hades says to Destruction, we have not seen His form, but we have heard His voice' (Job 28:22). It is not plainly the place, which heard the voice, but those who have been put in Hades, and have abandoned themselves to destruction, as persons who have thrown themselves voluntarily from a ship into the sea. They are those that hear the divine power and voice. For who in his senses can suppose the souls of the righteous and those of sinners in the same condemnation, charging Providence with injustice? Do not the Scriptures show that the Lord preached the Gospel to those that perished in the flood in the days of Noah? (1 Peter 3:19-20). For it was suitable that those possessed of greater worth in righteousness, on repenting of their transgressions, yet being confessedly of the number of the people of God Almighty, should be saved, each one according to his individual knowledge."

"As I think, the Savior also exerts His might because it is His work to save; which accordingly He also did by drawing to salvation those who became willing, by the preaching of the Gospel, to believe on Him, wherever they were. If the Lord descended to Hades for no other end but to preach the Gospel, then all who believe shall be saved, although they may be of the Gentiles, on making their profession there. Since God's punishments are saving and disciplinary, leading to conversion, He chooses rather the repentance than the death of a sinner (Ezekiel 18:23, 32; 33:11). Especially since souls, although darkened by passions, when released from their bodies, are able to perceive more clearly, because of their being no longer obstructed by the flesh."

"One righteous man, then, differs not from another righteous man, whether he be of the Law or a Greek. For God is not only Lord of the Jews, but of all men, and more nearly the Father of those who know Him. For if to live well and according to the Law is to live, also to live rationally according to the Law is to live; and those who lived rightly before the Law were classed under faith (Romans 3:29, 10:12). If they were judged to be righteous, though they are in Hades and in prison (1 Peter 3:19), on hearing the voice of the Lord, they may have turned and believed."

"Did not the same dispensation occur in Hades, so that even there, all the souls, on hearing the proclamation, might either exhibit repentance, or confess that their punishment was just, because they believed not? It was not arbitrariness, for those who had departed before the Advent of the Lord to obtain either salvation or punishment. For it is not right that these should be condemned without trial, and that those alone who lived after the Advent should have the advantage of the divine righteousness. But to all rational souls it was said from above, 'Whatever one of you has done in ignorance, without clearly knowing God, if, on becoming conscious, he repents, all his sins will be forgiven him' (Acts 3:17, 19). 'I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life' (Deuteronomy 30:19). And in another Scripture, He says, 'If you are willing and obedient, you shall eat the good of the land; but if you refuse and rebel, you shall be devoured by the sword. For the mouth of the Lord has spoken'" (Isaiah 1:19-20).

"If, then, He preached the Gospel to those in the flesh that they might not be condemned unjustly, how is it conceivable that He did not for the same cause preach the Gospel to those who had departed this life before His Advent? 'For the Lord is righteous and loves righteousness; his face beholds uprightness' (Psalm 11:7 LXX). 'But he that loves unrighteousness hates his own soul' (Psalm 11:5 LXX). If, then, in the deluge all sinful flesh perished, punishment having been inflicted on them for correction, we must first believe that the will of God, which is disciplinary and beneficent, saves those who turn to Him."

Paul stated, "For the Lord Himself will descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of an archangel, and with the trumpet of God. And the dead in Christ will rise first. Then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. And thus, we shall always be with the Lord" (1 Thessalonians 4:16-17).

That is, first the dead in Christ rise, which means those on the earth in Hades waiting in Abraham's bosom. After this, those Christians who are still alive and remain get caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. All this occurs at the Second Coming of Christ. What this means is that Abraham's bosom began filling up again after the Lord's Resurrection, such that there are "the dead in Christ" still on earth who will rise first.

Tertullian of Carthage stated<sup>20</sup> that while Abraham's bosom in Hades was emptied when the Lord rose from the dead, others who have died since then have filled up Abraham's bosom again. Christ entered Hades at His death in the form and condition of a dead man – that is, with His human soul, where His human body in the grave was still wrapped in 100 pounds of linen, myrrh and aloes (John 19:39-40). Some people indignantly stated that they will not go to Abraham's bosom when they die, but to heaven. However, heaven may be reserved for just the martyrs until the Second Coming.

"Christ in His death spent three days in the heart of the earth; that is, in the secret inner recess which is hidden in the earth, enclosed by the earth, and superimposed on the abysmal depths which lie still lower down. Now although Christ is God, yet, being also man, 'He died for our sins according to the Scriptures', and 'according to the same Scriptures was buried and rose again the third day' (1 Corinthians 15:3-4). With the same law of His being He fully complied, by remaining in Hades in the form and condition of a dead man. Nor did He ascend into the heights of heaven before descending into the lower parts of the earth, that He might there make the patriarchs and prophets partakers of Himself (1 Peter 3:19). This being the case, you must suppose Hades to be a subterranean region, and keep at arm's length those who are too proud to believe that the souls of the faithful deserve a place in the lower regions. These persons, who are 'disciples above their Teacher, and servants above their Master' (Matthew 10:24), would no doubt spurn to receive the comfort of the resurrection, if they must expect it in Abraham's bosom. But it was for this purpose, say they, that Christ descended into hell, that we might not ourselves have to descend there. Well, then, what difference is there between heathens and Christians, if the same prison awaits them all when dead? How, indeed, shall the soul mount up to heaven, where Christ is already sitting at the Father's right hand, when as yet the archangel's trumpet has not been heard by the command of God? (1 Corinthians 15:52, 1 Thessalonians 4:16) Those, whom the Lord is to find on the earth when He comes, have not been caught up into the air to meet Him, in company with the dead in Christ, who shall be the first to arise (1 Thessalonians 4:16-17). To no one is heaven opened; the earth is still safe for him; yet I would not say it is shut against him. When the world shall pass away, then the kingdom of heaven shall be opened. We shall sleep in Paradise, you tell me, where already the patriarchs and prophets have already been removed from Hades in the retinue of the Lord's resurrection. How is it, then, that the region of Paradise, which as revealed to John in the Spirit lay under the altar (Revelation 6:9), displays no other souls as in it besides the souls of the martyrs? How is it that the most heroic martyr Perpetua<sup>21</sup> on the day of her passion saw only her fellow-martyrs there? In the revelation which she received of Paradise, the sword which guarded the entrance permitted none to go in there, except those who had died in Christ and not in Adam? Observe, then, the difference between a heathen and a Christian in their death. If you have to lay down your life for God, as the Comforter counsels, it is not in gentle fevers and on soft beds, but in the sharp pains of martyrdom. You must take up the cross and bear it after your Master, as He has Himself instructed you (Matthew 16:24). The sole key to unlock Paradise is your own life's blood."

We need to be clear that "Abraham's Bosom" is not heaven, but it is not hell either. For Lazarus, it was obviously a place of comfort, just as we pray for the departed that they might be sheltered<sup>22</sup> "in a place of brightness, a place of verdure, a place of repose, whence all sickness, sorrow and sighing has fled away, and where the sight of Thy Countenance rejoices all the Saints from all the ages".

Tertullian of Carthage also noted<sup>23</sup> that the Scripture makes a distinction between Abraham's bosom and hell, with a great gulf in between. Since the rich man had to lift up his eyes to see Abraham's bosom, this implies that hell is down lower. Abraham's bosom is designed for the reception of Abraham's children, who are of the same Faith as Abraham, where this place is not heaven, but is higher than hell. This place must be a large, but temporary location to contain the seed of Abraham, which is numberless as the stars of heaven.

“The Scripture itself expressly distinguishes between Abraham’s bosom, where the poor man dwells, and the infernal place of torment. ‘Hell’, I take it, means one thing, and ‘Abraham’s bosom’ another. ‘A great gulf’ is said to separate those regions, and to hinder a passage from one to the other. Besides, the rich man could not have ‘lifted up his eyes’ (Luke 16:23) and from a distance too, except to a superior height; this implies the said distance up to a vast immensity of height and depth. It must therefore be evident to every man of intelligence who has ever heard of the Elysian fields<sup>24</sup>, that there is some determinate place called Abraham’s bosom. It is designed for the reception of the souls of Abraham’s children, even from among the Gentiles, since he is ‘the father of many nations’ (Romans 4:17-18), which must be classed among his family. They are of the same faith as he himself, where he believed God (Romans 4:3; Galatians 3:6; James 2:23), without the yoke of the law and the sign of circumcision. This region, therefore, I call Abraham’s bosom. Although it is not in heaven, it is yet higher than hell, and is appointed to afford an interval of rest to the souls of the righteous, until the consummation of all things. The resurrection of all men shall complete the ‘full recompense of their reward’” (Compare Hebrews 2:2, 10:35, 11:26).

“Now, although this everlasting abode is promised, and the ascending steps to heaven are built by the Creator, who further promises that the seed of Abraham shall be even as the stars of heaven. Because of the heavenly promise, why may it not be possible, without any injury to that promise, that by Abraham’s bosom is meant some temporary receptacle of faithful souls. In this is delineated an image of the future, and where some foresight is given of the glory of both judgments. If so, you have here, O heretics, during your present lifetime, a warning that Moses and the prophets declare one only God, the Creator, and His only Christ. Both awards of everlasting punishment and eternal salvation rest with Him, the one only God, who kills and who makes alive. Well, Marcion says that our God from heaven has commanded us not to listen to Moses and the prophets, but Christ; listen to Him is the command from the Father (Luke 9:35). This is true enough. For the apostles had by that time sufficiently heard Moses and the prophets, for they had followed Christ, being persuaded by Moses and the prophets. For even Peter would not have been able to say, ‘You are the Christ’ (Luke 9:20) unless he had beforehand heard and believed Moses and the prophets, by whom alone Christ had been announced. Their faith, indeed, had deserved this confirmation by such a voice from heaven as should ask them to listen to Him, whom they had recognized as preaching peace, announcing glad tidings, promising an everlasting abode, building for them steps upwards into heaven” (Isaiah 52:7, 33:14 LXX, Amos 9:6).

John Chrysostom stated<sup>25</sup> that it is not possible for a soul to go anywhere but Hades after the death of its body. If this were possible, the rich man would not have asked Abraham to send Lazarus back from the dead to warn his five brothers, but he would have gone himself.

“It is not possible for a soul, torn away from the body, to wander here anymore. For ‘the souls of the righteous are in the hand of God’ (Wisdom of Solomon 3:1). If of the righteous, then those children’s souls<sup>26</sup> also; for neither are they wicked; and the souls too of sinners are straightway led away hence. And it is evident from Lazarus and the rich man; and elsewhere too Christ said, ‘Fool! This night your soul will be required of you’ (Luke 12:20). It may not be that a soul, when it is gone forth from the body, should wander here; nor is the reason hard to see. We, going about on the earth which is familiar and well known to us, and having a body, when we are journeying in a strange road, know not which way to go unless we have someone to lead us. How should the soul, being rent away from the body, and having gone out from all her accustomed region, know where to walk without one to show her the way?”

“From many other things too one might perceive, that it is not possible for a disembodied soul to remain here. For Stephen said, ‘Lord Jesus, receive my spirit’ (Acts 7:59); and Paul said, ‘Having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better’ (Philippians 1:23). Of the patriarch Abraham too the Scripture said, that ‘you shall depart to your fathers in peace, nourished in a good old age’ (Genesis 15:15 LXX). And as to the proof, that neither can the souls of sinners continue here; hear the rich man making much entreaty for this, and not obtaining it. Had it been at all possible, he would have come back, and told what had come to pass there (Luke 16:27-28). Therefore, it is evident that after their departure hence our souls are led away into some place, having no more power of themselves to come back again, but awaiting that dreadful day.”

What is It Like After Death?

Many times, the Scriptures speak about the wrath of God. It is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men (Romans 1:18) and abides on him who does not believe (John 3:36; Ephesians 5:6). Those with hard and unrepentant hearts treasure up for themselves wrath on Judgment Day (Romans 2:5), while those justified by His Blood are saved from wrath (Romans 5:9). When the Wrath of God comes at the end times, it will be fierce (Revelation 16:19) and has been compared to a winepress squeezing out the last bit of juice (Revelation 14:19, 19:15). Those on the receiving end of the Wrath of God will get it full strength and will be tormented forever (Revelation 14:10-11). With these events at the end times, the Wrath of God is described as being complete (Revelation 15:1).

Appendix A summarizes Scriptural descriptions of “hell.” Some descriptive characteristics are: flame, heat, wailing, gnashing of teeth, but yet also black darkness. How this can be is somewhat of a mystery. Its location is also a mystery. It is described as just outside the New Jerusalem (Revelation 22:15, 14:9-11), where the righteous will be able to see and be abhorred at the place of the ungodly (Isaiah 66:24; compare Mark 9:43-48). This image of the so-near-yet-so-far is reinforced from the use of the term “Gehenna,” the eternally smoldering garbage dump outside the city of Jerusalem (Matthew 23:29-33).

<sup>26</sup> Chrysostom was addressing a practice in his day where sorcerers take children and slay them in order to have the child’s soul to assist them in their sorcery. This is just stage-play and demonic deceit.

Hippolytus of Rome outlined<sup>27</sup> in length what it is like after death when the soul enters Hades. The angels escort the souls in and direct them to the right or to the left, to Abraham's bosom and a place of light and refreshment, or to the place of torment, where they are dragged on against their will. The righteous are hymned by the angels as they enter and delight with the face of the fathers and the righteous, who are always smiling, as they wait for the eternal rest that follows this location. The unrighteous are reproached and threatened by the angels as they are led to the lower parts, hear the incessant agitation, feel the hot smoke, and shudder in horror at the expectation of future judgment. At the Second Coming of Christ, all of Hades will be emptied and all will receive their physical bodies back in an immortal form. This will be great joy to the righteous, who will receive their physical bodies healed of any sickness and deformity that they had when they died. The unrighteous will receive their physical bodies back immortal, but unchanged from any suffering and disease they had when they died. All will then appear before Christ and all will agree that they are receiving what is just according to their works. The righteous will remember only the righteous deeds by which they reached the heavenly kingdom. The unrighteous will see the righteous no longer but will be led away to the unquenchable fire and the fiery worm.

“We must speak of Hades, in which the souls both of the righteous and the unrighteous are detained. Hades is a place in the created system, rude, a locality beneath the earth, in which the light of the world does not shine; and as the sun does not shine in this locality, there must necessarily be perpetual darkness there. This locality has been destined to be as it were a guard-house for souls, at which the angels are stationed as guards, distributing according to each one's deeds the temporary punishments for different characters. And in this locality, there is a certain place set apart by itself, a lake of unquenchable fire, into which we suppose no one has ever yet been cast. This is prepared for the day determined by God, in which one sentence of righteous judgment shall be justly applied to all. The unrighteous, and those who didn't believe God, who have honored as God the vain works of the hands of men, idols fashioned by themselves, shall be sentenced to this endless punishment. But the righteous shall obtain the incorruptible and unfading kingdom, who indeed are at present detained in Hades, but not in the same place with the unrighteous. To this locality there is one descent, at the gate whereof we believe an archangel is stationed. When those who are conducted by the angels have passed through this gate, they do not proceed on one and the same way; but the righteous, being conducted in the light toward the right, and being hymned by the angels stationed at the place, are brought to a locality full of light. There the righteous from the beginning dwell, not ruled by necessity, but enjoying always the contemplation of the blessings which are in their view and delighting themselves with the expectation of others ever new and deeming those ever better than these. That place brings no toils to them. There, there is neither fierce heat, nor cold, nor thorn; but the face of the fathers and the righteous is seen to be always smiling, as they wait for the rest and eternal revival in heaven which succeed this location. We call this place by the name Abraham's bosom. But the unrighteous are dragged toward the left by angels who are ministers of punishment, and they go of their own accord no longer, but are dragged by force as prisoners. The angels appointed over them send them along, reproaching them and threatening them with an eye of terror, forcing them down into the lower parts. When they are brought there, those appointed to that service drag them on to the confines of hell. Those who are confined there hear incessantly the agitation and feel the hot smoke. When that vision is so near, as they see the terrible and excessively glowing spectacle of the fire, they shudder in horror at the expectation of the future judgment, already feeling the power of their punishment. Where they see the place of the fathers and the righteous, they are also punished there. For a deep and vast abyss is set there in the midst, so that neither can any of the righteous in sympathy think to pass it, nor any of the unrighteous dare to cross it.”

“The souls of all are detained until the time which God has determined; and then He will accomplish a resurrection of all, not by transferring souls into other bodies, but by raising the bodies themselves. The Greeks refuse credit to this because they see these bodies decayed in the grave; they need to learn not to be incredulous. They believe that the soul is originated and is made immortal by God, according to the opinion of Plato; they ought not to refuse to believe that God is able also to raise the body, which is composed of the same elements and make it immortal. We therefore believe that the body also is raised. If it became corrupt in the grave, it is not destroyed. That which is sown is sown indeed, bare grain; but at the command of God the Artificer it buds, and is raised arrayed and glorious, but not until it has first died, and been dissolved, and mingled with earth. Not without good reason do we believe in the resurrection of the body. If it is molded again anew, it is not raised the same thing as it is now, but pure and no longer corruptible. To each body its own proper soul will be given again; and the soul shall not be grieved, but shall rejoice together with it, abiding itself pure with it also pure. When the body is reunited with the soul, it will receive it again with great joy. But the unrighteous will receive their bodies unchanged, and not ransomed from suffering and disease, and unglorified, and still with all the ills in which they died. Whatever manner of persons they were when they lived without faith, as such they shall be faithfully judged.”

“For all, the righteous and the unrighteous alike, shall be brought before God the Word. For the Father has committed all judgment to Him; and in fulfillment of the Father’s counsel, He comes as Judge whom we call Christ. It is not Minos and Rhadamanthus<sup>28</sup> that are to judge the world, as you fancy, O Greeks, but He whom God the Father has glorified, of whom we have spoken elsewhere more in particular, for the profit of those who seek the truth. He, in administering the righteous judgment of the Father to all, assigns to each what is righteous according to his works. Being present at His judicial decision, all, both men, angels and demons, shall utter one voice, saying, ‘Righteous are Your judgments’ (Psalm 119:137). Of which voice the justification will be seen in the awarding to each that which is just; since to those who have done well shall be assigned righteously eternal bliss, and to the lovers of iniquity shall be given eternal punishment. The fire which is unquenchable and without end awaits these latter, and a certain fiery worm which doesn’t die, and which does not waste the body, but continues bursting forth from the body with unending pain. No sleep will give them rest; no night will soothe them; no death will deliver them from punishment; no voice of interceding friends will profit them. Neither are the righteous seen by them any longer, nor are they worthy of remembrance. But the righteous will remember only the righteous deeds by which they reached the heavenly kingdom, in which there is neither sleep, pain, corruption, care, night, nor day measured by time.”

John Chrysostom reminded<sup>29</sup> his people that the unrepentant will be dragged into the everlasting fire. No one can help us then, so it is imperative that we repent now.

“Consider therefore who they are who shall then be in dismay, who will be in grief, who dragged away to the fire, while the others are crowned. ‘Come you blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world’ (Matthew 25:34). And again, ‘Depart from Me, you cursed, into the everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels’” (Matthew 25:41).

“Let us not merely hear the words but write them also before our sight and let us imagine Him to be now present and saying these things, and that we are led away to that fire. What heart shall we have? What consolation? And what, when we are cut in two? (Matthew 24:51, Luke 12:46). And what when we are accused of rapacity? What excuse shall we have to utter? What specious argument? None: but of necessity bound, bending down, we must be dragged to the mouths of the furnace, to the river of fire, to the darkness, to the never-dying punishments, and entreat no one. For it is not possible, He says, to pass across from this side to that: for ‘there is a great gulf fixed between us and you’ (Luke 16:26). It is not possible even for those who wish it to go across and stretch out a helping hand. But we need to burn continually, no one aiding us, even should it be father or mother, or any whoever, even though he has much boldness toward God. For, it says, ‘A brother does not redeem; shall man redeem?’ (Psalm 49:7 LXX)

John Cassian noted<sup>30</sup> that no one praises God while they are sinning, as does no one who is in torment with Dives. On the other hand, the souls of those in Abraham’s bosom bless God and praise Him. The souls of those who have died are not idle; they are capable of feeling as the account of Dives and Lazarus shows. Just as the thief on the Cross entered Paradise that same day in his soul, so did Lazarus. In their changed condition they partake of some state which corresponds to their actions and what they deserve. The soul is the nobler part of man, in which as Paul shows, the image and glory of God consists. The soul contains in itself all the power of reason; it makes the dumb and senseless material flesh sensible, by participation with it. Paul recognized this such that he actually wished to depart from this flesh. By separation from the body, he might be able to be joined more earnestly to the Lord! Still more clearly Paul speaks of this state of the souls as one that is very full of life.

“Everyone while still existing in this body should already be aware that he must be committed to that state and office, of which he made himself a sharer and an adherent while in this life. He should not doubt that in that eternal world he will be partner with him, whose servant he chose to make himself here. ‘If anyone serves Me, let him follow Me; and where I am, there My servant will be also. If anyone serves Me, him My Father will honor’ (John 12:26). For as the kingdom of the devil is gained by consenting to sin, so the kingdom of God is attained by the practice of virtue in purity of heart and spiritual knowledge. But where the kingdom of God is, there most certainly eternal life is enjoyed, and where the kingdom of the devil is, there without doubt is death and the grave. And the man who is in this condition, cannot praise the Lord. 'The dead do not praise the Lord, nor any who go down (to the grave) into silence. But we will bless the Lord from this time forth and forevermore' (Psalm 115:17-18). 'For in death there is no remembrance of You; in the grave who will give You thanks?' (Psalm 6:6) i.e., no one will. For no man even though he were to call himself a Christian a thousand times over, or a monk, confesses God when he is sinning. No man who allows those things which the Lord hates, remembers God, nor calls himself with any truth the servant of Him, whose commands he scorns with obstinate rashness. In this death Paul declares that the widow is involved, who gives herself to pleasure, saying 'a widow who lives in pleasure is dead while she lives' (1 Timothy 5:6). There are then many who while still living in this body are dead, lying in the grave and cannot praise God. On the contrary there are many who though they are dead in the body yet bless God in the spirit and praise Him. 'Bless the Lord O spirits and souls of the righteous' (Daniel 3:86 LXX); and 'Let everything that has breath praise the Lord' (Psalm 150:6). In the Apocalypse the souls of those that are slain are not only said to praise God but to address Him also (Revelation 6:9-10). In the Gospel too the Lord says with still greater clearness to the Sadducees: 'But concerning the resurrection of the dead, have you not read what was spoken to you by God, saying, I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?' God is not the God of the dead, but of the living' (Matthew 22:31-32). For all do live unto Him. Of whom also Paul says: 'Therefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for He has prepared a city for them' (Hebrews 11:16). For that they are not idle after the separation from this body, and are not incapable of feeling, the parable in the Gospel shows, which tells us of the beggar Lazarus and Dives clothed in purple, one of whom obtained a position of bliss, i.e., Abraham's bosom, the other is consumed with the dreadful heat of eternal fire (Luke 16:19-25). But if you care to understand the words spoken to the thief, 'Assuredly, I say to you, today you will be with Me in Paradise' (Luke 23:43). What do they clearly show but that not only does their former intelligence continue with the souls, but also that in their changed condition they partake of some state which corresponds to their actions and what they deserve? For the Lord would certainly never have promised him this, if He had known that his soul after being separated from the flesh would either have been deprived of perception or have been resolved into nothing. For it was not the flesh of the thief but his soul which was to enter Paradise with Christ. At least we must avoid, and shun with the utmost horror, that wicked punctuation of the heretics. As they do not believe that Christ could be found in Paradise on the same day on which He descended into hell, thus punctuate 'Verily, I say unto you today', and making a stop apply. 'You shall be with Me in Paradise', in such a way that they imagine that this promise was not fulfilled at once after he departed from this life, but that it will be fulfilled after the resurrection. They do not understand what before the time of His resurrection He declared to the Jews, who fancied that He was hampered by human difficulties and weakness of the flesh as they were. He said, 'No one has ascended to heaven but He who came down from heaven, that is, the Son of Man who is in heaven' (John 3:13). By this He clearly shows that the souls of the departed are not only not deprived of their reason, but that they are not even without such feelings as hope and sorrow, joy and fear. They already are beginning to taste beforehand something of what is reserved for them at the last judgment, and that they are not as some unbelievers hold resolved into nothing after their departure from this life<sup>31</sup>. But they live a more real life and are still more earnest in waiting on the praises of God. To discuss a little about the nature of the soul itself, is it not beyond the bounds of the madness of all stupidity, even to have the slightest suspicion that the nobler part of man, in which as Paul shows, the image and glory of God consists? (1 Corinthians 11:7, Colossians 3:10). When the burden of the body with which the soul is oppressed in this world is laid aside, will the soul become insensible? The soul contains in itself all the power of reason; it makes the dumb and senseless material flesh sensible, by participation with it. Especially when it follows, and the order of reason itself demands that when the mind has put off the grossness of the flesh with which it is now weighed down, it will restore its intellectual powers better than ever. The soul will receive the flesh back in a purer and finer condition than it lost it. But so far did Paul recognize that what we say is true, that he actually wished to depart from this flesh. That by separation from it, he might be able to be joined more earnestly to the Lord! He said, 'For I am hard pressed between the two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better' (Philippians 1:23). And therefore 'So we are always confident, knowing that while we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord' (2 Corinthians 5:6). 'Therefore, we make it our aim, whether present or absent, to be well pleasing to Him' (2 Corinthians 5:9); and he declares indeed that the continuance of the soul which is in the flesh is distance from the Lord, and absence from Christ. He trusts with entire faith that its separation and departure from this flesh involves presence with Christ. Again, still more clearly Paul speaks of this state of the souls as one that is very full of life. 'But you have come to Mount Zion and to the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn who are registered in heaven, to God the Judge of all, to the spirits of just men made perfect' (Hebrews 12:22-23). Of which spirits he speaks again, 'Furthermore, we have had human fathers who corrected us, and we paid them respect. Shall we not much more readily be in subjection to the Father of spirits and live?' (Hebrews 12:9)

The Eternal Hopelessness in Hades

While the soul and the body recognize each other, even when the soul is separated from the body in Hades, the souls in torment with Dives have a certain hopelessness to them, knowing that this will be their place forever. Dives was able to communicate with the Patriarch Abraham, but Abraham was able to be of no help at all to Dives. Once we have departed this life, no repentance is possible anymore; however, the Righteous Judge will not overlook even small good things that we have done. But it gets even worse for the soul in torment after Judgment Day: then comes the "death of the soul" when the soul is eternally alienated from the Holy Spirit.

<sup>31</sup> Augustine referred to some heretics who had denied a visible Paradise and a future resurrection. These heretics also said that the soul died along with the body and would be revived at the end of the world.

Gregory of Nyssa stated<sup>32</sup> that the human soul clings to its body and they recognize each other. Some parts of our bodies vary, such as in growth or as a result of disease, while other parts stay constant, such as the part that was created in the likeness of God. When the soul separates from the body at death, the soul retains some signs of its identity. When our bodies rise again at the Last Judgment, it will have all the tokens of its previous identity and will reunite with the soul.

“You have seen surely somewhere among the habitations of men a common herd of some kind of animals collected from every quarter. Yet when the herd is again divided among its owners, acquaintance with their homes and the marks put on the cattle serve to restore to each his own. If you conceive of yourself also something like this, you will not be far from the right way. For as the soul clings to and longs for the body that has been wedded to it, there also attaches to it in secret a certain close relationship and power of recognition, in virtue of their commixture. It is as though some marks had been imprinted by nature, by the aid of which the community remains unconfused, separated by the distinctive signs. Now as the soul attracts to itself that which is its own and properly belongs to it, what labor is involved for the Divine power to discern kindred things when they are urged to their own place by the unspeakable attraction of nature, whatever it may be? For that some signs of our compound nature remain in the soul even after the body is dissolved in the tomb is shown by the dialogue in Hades (Luke 16:24-31). The bodies had been conveyed to the tomb, but some bodily token still remained in the souls by which both Lazarus was recognized and the rich man was known.”

“It is therefore easy to believe that in the bodies that rise again there will be a return from the common stock to the individual, especially for anyone who examines our nature with careful attention. For neither does our being consist altogether in flux and change, but according to the more accurate statement some of our constituent parts is stationary while the rest goes through a process of alteration. For the body is on the one hand altered by way of growth and diminution, changing, like garments, the vesture of its successive statures, while the form, on the other hand, remains in itself unaltered through every change. It does not vary from the marks once imposed on it by nature but appears with its own tokens of identity in all the changes which the body undergoes.”

“We must except from this statement, however, the change which happens to the form as the result of disease. For the deformity of sickness takes possession of the form like some strange mask. When this is removed by the word, as in the case of the leprosy of Naaman the Syrian (2 Kings 5), or of those ten lepers (Luke 17:12-19), the form that had been hidden by disease is once more by means of health restored to sight again with its own marks of identity.”

“Now the element of our soul which is in the likeness of God is not that which is subject to flux and change by way of alteration. This stable and unalterable element in our composition is allied, and various differences of combination produce varieties of forms. The form necessarily remains in the soul as in the impression of a seal; those things which have been received from the seal (the impression of its stamp) do not fail to be recognized by the soul.”

John Chrysostom stated<sup>33</sup> that repentance makes us worthy to enter Abraham's bosom. Once we have departed this life, no repentance will help and no call for help will be heard. The demons set in motion everything that will lead us to despair. But not even small items of good will be overlooked by the righteous judge.

"Hell has not been made for us but for the devil and his angels (Matthew 25:41); but the kingdom has been prepared for us before the foundation of the world (Matthew 25:34). Let us not then make ourselves unworthy of entrance into the bride-chamber: for as long as we are in this world, even if we commit countless sins it is possible to wash them all away by manifesting repentance for our offenses. But once we have departed to the other world even if we display the most earnest repentance it will be of no avail, not even if we gnash our teeth, beat our breasts, and utter innumerable calls for help. No one with the tip of his finger will apply a drop to our burning bodies, but we shall only hear those words which the rich man heard in the parable, 'Between us and you there is a great gulf fixed' (Luke 16:26). Let us then, I beseech you, recover our senses here and let us recognize our Master as He ought to be recognized. Only when we are in Hades should we abandon the hope derived from repentance. While we are here even if it is applied in old age itself it exhibits much strength. The devil sets everything in motion in order to root in us the reasoning which comes of despair; for he knows that if we repent even a little we shall not do this without some reward. The man who gives even a cup of cold water has his recompense reserved for him (Matthew 10:42). So also, the man who has repented of the evils which he has done, even if he cannot exhibit the repentance which his offenses deserve, will have a commensurate reward. For not a single item of good, however small it may be, will be overlooked by the righteous judge. For if He makes such an exact scrutiny of our sins, as to require punishment for both our words and thoughts, much more will our good deeds, whether they be great or small, be reckoned to our credit at that day."

Another aspect of "hell" is suggested by Basil the Great. He suggests<sup>34</sup> that the "cutting in half" of the ungodly on Judgment Day (Matthew 24:51, Luke 12:46) refers to the eternal alienation of the soul from the Holy Spirit.

"Those who were sealed by the Spirit for the day of redemption and preserve pure and undiminished the first fruits which they received of the Spirit, are those who shall hear the words: 'Well done, good and faithful servant; you were faithful over a few things, I will make you ruler over many things. Enter into the joy of your Lord' (Matthew 25:21). In like manner those who have grieved the Holy Spirit by the wickedness of their ways or have not done for Him Who gave to them, shall be deprived of what they have received, their grace being transferred to others. According to one of the evangelists, they shall even be wholly cut in two, — the cutting in two meaning complete separation from the Spirit (Matthew 24:51, Luke 12:46). The body is not divided, part being delivered to chastisement, and part let off. Nor is the soul cut in two; the whole soul possesses the sinful affection throughout and works the wickedness in co-operation with the body. The cutting in two, as I have observed, is the separation of the soul from the Spirit. For now, although the Spirit does not suffer mixture with the unworthy, He nevertheless does seem in a manner to be present with them that have once been sealed, awaiting the salvation which follows on their conversion. But then He will be wholly cut off from the soul that has defiled His grace. For this reason, ‘In Hell there is no man that makes confession; in death no man that remembers God’ (Psalm 6:5 LXX), because the aid of the Spirit is no longer present” (Matthew 16:17).

John Chrysostom makes a similar conclusion<sup>35</sup> in discussing the death of the soul. Just as the body dies when the soul is separated from it, so the soul dies when the energy of the Holy Spirit leaves it destitute in hell.

“I will show you (not just) the bodies of men, but the souls of men slaughtered in the other world. For it is possible for a soul to be slain with the slaughter peculiar to the soul. For as there is a death of the body, so there is also of the soul. ‘The soul that sins’, says the Prophet, ‘it shall die’ (Ezekiel 18:4). The death of the soul, however, is not like the death of the body; it is far more shocking. For this bodily death, separating the soul from the body...when the body has been in time dissolved and crumbled away, it is again gathered together in incorruption, and receives back its own proper soul. Such is this bodily death. But that of the soul is awful. For this death (of the soul), when dissolution takes place, does not let (the soul) pass or separate, as the death of the body does, but binds it down again to an imperishable body and consigns it to the unquenchable fire. This then is the death of the soul. And as therefore there is a death of the soul, so there is also a slaughter of the soul. What is the slaughter of the body? It is the being turned into a corpse, the being stripped of the energy derived from the soul. What is the slaughter of the soul? It is its being made a corpse also. And how is the soul made a corpse? Because as the body then becomes a corpse when the soul leaves it destitute of its own vital energy, so also does the soul then become a corpse when the Holy Spirit leaves it destitute of His spiritual energy” (Homily XVIII on Ephesians 5).

Jerome of Bethlehem wrote<sup>36</sup> to Marcella regarding the unexpected death of her friend, the Abbess Lea in Rome. He compared Lea with the poor man Lazarus and to the Roman Prefect Praetextatus, who died at about the same time. Just as Lazarus and Dives were in different parts of Hades, so are Lea and Praetextatus.

“Suddenly the news came that our most saintly friend Lea<sup>37</sup> had departed from the body. As was only natural, you turned deadly pale; for there are few persons, if any, who do not burst into tears when the earthen vessel breaks (2 Corinthians 4:7). But if you wept it was not from doubt as to her future lot, but only because you had not rendered to her the last sad offices which are due to the dead. Finally, as we were still conversing together, a second message informed us that her remains had been already conveyed to Ostia.”

“You may ask why we should repeat all this. I will reply in the apostle’s words, ‘much in every way’ (Romans 3:2). First, it shows that all must hail with joy the release of a soul which has trampled Satan under foot, and won for itself, at last, a crown of tranquility. Secondly, it gives me an opportunity of briefly describing her life. Thirdly, it enables me to assure you that the consul-elect<sup>38</sup>, that detractor of his age, is now in Tartarus. Who can sufficiently eulogize our dear Lea’s mode of living? So complete was her conversion to the Lord that, becoming the head of a monastery, she showed herself a true mother to the virgins in it, wore coarse sackcloth instead of soft raiment, passed sleepless nights in prayer, and instructed her companions even more by example than by precept. So great was her humility that she, who had once been the mistress of many, was accounted the servant of all; and certainly, the less she was reckoned an earthly mistress the more she became a servant of Christ. She was careless of her dress, neglected her hair, and ate only the coarsest food. Still, in all that she did, she avoided ostentation that she might not have her reward in this world” (Matthew 6:2).

“Now, therefore, in return for her short toil, Lea enjoys everlasting felicity; she is welcomed into the choirs of the angels; she is comforted in Abraham’s bosom. And, as once the beggar Lazarus saw the rich man, for all his purple, lying in torment, so does Lea see the consul, not now in his triumphal robe but clothed in mourning, and asking for a drop of water from her little finger (Luke 16:19-24). How great a change we have here! A few days ago, the highest dignitaries of the city walked before him as he ascended the ramparts of the capitol like a general celebrating a triumph. The Roman people leapt up to welcome and applaud him, and at the news of his death the whole city was moved. Now he is desolate and naked, a prisoner in the foulest darkness, and not, as his unhappy wife<sup>39</sup> falsely asserts, set in the royal abode of the milky way<sup>40</sup>. On the other hand, Lea, who was always shut up in her one closet, who seemed poor and of little worth, and whose life was accounted madness (Wisdom of Solomon 5:4), now follows Christ and sings, ‘As we have heard, so have we also seen, in the city of the Lord of hosts, in the city of our God’” (Psalm 48:8 LXX).

Isaac of Nineveh suggests<sup>41</sup> that the love of God toward the ungodly in hell is a torment in itself. Gregory of Nyssa suggests<sup>42</sup> that the gulf separating Lazarus and the rich man is made by decisions we make in this life and not necessarily by a parting of the earth.

Final Thoughts

When the New Jerusalem comes, there will be no night, nor will there be any sun or moon to give light (Revelation 21:22-25). The Glory of God illumines everything. This obviously refers to the uncreated light of God.

---

<sup>38</sup> That is Vettius Agorius Praetextatus, the prefect of Rome. Praetextatus had told Pope Damasus that if he could hope to obtain the Papacy, he would immediately embrace the Christian religion.

Similarly, the fires of hell are said to burn forever (Revelation 14:9-11, 21:8, 20:10). If this were physical fire, it would eventually burn itself out when all its fuel was consumed. Thus, the fires of hell must be uncreated fire. God Himself is often described as a consuming fire (Hebrews 12:29, Exodus 24:17, Isaiah 33:14), and the Throne of God is pictured as being in the midst of fire (Ezekiel 1).

Could the uncreated light of God that illumines the earth and the uncreated fire from His Presence also cause the fires of hell? The Scriptures speak of how God will not be angry forever (Psalm 85:5, Isaiah 57:16). But yet God cannot change Who He is either. Perhaps another aspect to the torment of hell is for the unrighteous to live forever in the light of God where they would be continually repelled by His Holiness.

In discussing the good things the rich man had in his life, versus the evil things Lazarus had (Luke 16:25), we are reminded of the suffering and groaning of Job, who complained that the wicked tend to live in ease and prosperity, often up to the very time of death, whereas others suffer so much. But Job was also aware that things would be quite different in the hereafter! (Job 21:7-16). Therefore, the Lord warns those who are rich, full of good earthly things, or well-spoken of by men in this life (Luke 6:24-26). James cries out that the rich would “weep and howl” if only they could see the eternal realities they face because of their life of wanton pleasure (James 5:1-6). This is covered in more detail in the Gospel lesson for the 9th Sunday of Luke (the rich Fool).

The Lord in His wisdom and mercy often does things deliberately to give us an opportunity to repent. Lazarus was “laid at the rich man’s gate” in order that the rich man might have an opportunity to do some good work (Luke 16:20). All Lazarus wanted was the crumbs that fell from the rich man’s table (Luke 16:21). But what did he get? The only mercy that was showed to him was via the dogs who licked his sores (Luke 16:21). The saliva of dogs has some medicinal value, even if it isn’t very aesthetically pleasing. However, the rich man’s life was so focused on his own pleasure that he failed to take advantage of this opportunity at his gate.

We might also ask, what about those people who never had a chance to repent or who never knew about God? What about the departed who the saints have prayed for over the centuries? They can’t cross the “great gulf”, but what happens to them? It is not reasonable to say that all the prayers of the saints are worthless! And we should never underestimate the mercy of God. These questions are part of the Mystery of Hell. A more extensive discussion of this subject is included under the heading “The Church Fathers on the Descent into Hell” in the Study on Holy Saturday.

Where Did Purgatory Come From?

Prayer for the dead has been part of the prayers of the Church from the beginning, and even dates to the time before Christ came. For example, consider the actions of Judas Maccabaeus:

“As Esdris and his men had been fighting for a long time and were weary, Judas (Maccabaeus) called upon the Lord to show himself their ally and leader in the battle. In the language of their fathers he raised the battle cry, with hymns; then he charged against Gorgias' men when they were not expecting it and put them to flight. Then Judas assembled his army and went to the city of Adullam. As the seventh day was coming on, they purified themselves according to the custom, and they kept the sabbath there. On the next day, as by that time it had become necessary, Judas and his men went to take up the bodies of the fallen and to bring them back to lie with their kinsmen in the sepulchers of their fathers. Then under the tunic of every one of the dead they found sacred tokens of the idols of Jamnia, which the law forbids the Jews to wear. And it became clear to all that this was why these men had fallen. So they all blessed the ways of the Lord, the righteous Judge, who reveals the things that are hidden; and they turned to prayer, beseeching that the sin which had been committed might be wholly blotted out. And the noble Judas exhorted the people to keep themselves free from sin, for they had seen with their own eyes what had happened because of the sin of those who had fallen. He also took up a collection, man by man, to the amount of two thousand drachmas of silver, and sent it to Jerusalem to provide for a sin offering. In doing this he acted very well and honorably, taking account of the resurrection. For if he were not expecting that those who had fallen would rise again, it would have been superfluous and foolish to pray for the dead. But if he was looking to the splendid reward that is laid up for those who fall asleep in godliness, it was a holy and pious thought. Therefore, he made atonement for the dead, that they might be delivered from their sin” (2 Maccabees 12:36-45).

Although prayer for the departed predates Christ’s earthly ministry, some might say that the departed are either in heaven or hell and that there is nothing that we can do about it. Yet the Lord had a conversation with the Sadducees that has a bearing on this:

“Then some Sadducees, who say there is no resurrection, came to Jesus; and they asked Him, saying: ‘Teacher, Moses wrote to us that if a man's brother dies, and leaves his wife behind, and leaves no children, his brother should take his wife and raise up offspring for his brother. Now there were seven brothers. The first took a wife; and dying, he left no offspring. And the second took her, and he died; nor did he leave any offspring. And the third likewise. So the seven had her and left no offspring. Last of all the woman died also. Therefore, in the resurrection, when they rise, whose wife will she be? For all seven had her as wife’. Jesus answered and said to them, ‘Are you not therefore mistaken, because you do not know the Scriptures nor the power of God? For when they rise from the dead, they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are like angels in heaven. But concerning the dead, that they rise, have you not read in the book of Moses, in the burning bush passage, how God spoke to him, saying, ‘I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob’? He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living. You are therefore greatly mistaken” (Mark 12:18-27).

As we saw previously with Lazarus and Dives, the departed are very much alive. Those in Abraham’s bosom are able to even pray for us. It is questionable whether those in the flames with Dives are able to do that, since they are so distracted with the heat and flames. Those who might question praying for the departed generally do not question praying for one another among the living. Since the departed, especially those in Abraham’s bosom, are still very much alive, there should be no question about praying for them and they for us.

However, Purgatory<sup>43</sup> is different than prayers for the dead; Purgatory is the intermediate state between one's death and the universal resurrection. The Orthodox Church admits of such an intermediate state, referred to as Hades but refrains from defining it very much. The Roman Catholic Church goes differently by defining the intermediate state, of the belief that sins can be purged by suffering in an afterlife, and that the purgation can be expedited by the intercession of the living.

While use of the word<sup>44</sup> “purgatory” as a noun appeared perhaps only between 1160 and 1180 AD, giving rise to the idea of purgatory as a place. The Roman Catholic tradition of purgatory as a transitional condition is claimed to have a history that dates back, even before Jesus Christ, to the worldwide practice of caring for the dead and praying for them and to the belief that prayer for the dead contributed to their afterlife purification. The same practice appears in other traditions, such as the medieval Chinese Buddhist practice of making offerings on behalf of the dead, who are said to suffer numerous trials. Roman Catholic belief in after-life purification is based on the practice of praying for the dead, and which, according to the Catechism of the Catholic Church, was adopted by Christians from the beginning. This practice presupposes that the dead are thereby assisted between death and their entry into their final abode. No mention is made regarding how the souls of the dead cross “the great gulf” mentioned in the story of Lazarus and the rich man.

Shortly before becoming<sup>45</sup> a Roman Catholic, the English scholar John Henry Newman argued that the essence of the doctrine is locatable in ancient tradition, and that the core consistency of such beliefs is evidence that Christianity was ‘originally given to us from heaven’. Roman Catholics consider the teaching on purgatory, but not the imaginative accretions, to be part of the faith derived from the revelation of Jesus Christ that was preached by the Apostles. Of the early Church Fathers, Origen<sup>46</sup> is quoted as saying that ‘He who comes to be saved, comes to be saved through fire’ that burns away sins and worldliness like lead, leaving behind only pure gold. Ambrose of Milan speaks of a kind of ‘baptism of fire’ which is located at the entrance to Heaven, and through which all must pass, at the end of the world. This may be a reference to

“I love the Lord, because He has heard My voice and my supplications.

Because He has inclined His ear to me, therefore I will call upon Him as long as I live. The pains of death surrounded me, and the pangs of Sheol<sup>47</sup> laid hold of me; I found trouble and sorrow. Then I called upon the name of the Lord: ‘O Lord, I implore You, deliver my soul!’” (Psalm 116:1-4)

To call this a reference to Purgatory, one has to take the text out of context. The Psalmist is still alive, yet he says that he is surrounded by the pangs of Hades (Sheol).

Something else that Ambrose could be referring to is the River of Fire that proceeds from the Throne of God at Judgment Day (Daniel 7:10). This is not really a reference to Purgatory either since we only see this River of Fire on Judgment Day and not now.

Gregory the Great said that<sup>48</sup> the belief in purgatory is ‘established’ and ‘to be believed’, insisting, however, that the purgatorial fire can only purify away minor transgressions, not ‘iron, bronze, or lead’ or other ‘hardened’ sins. By this he meant that attachments to sin, habits of sin, and even venial sins could be removed in purgatory, but not mortal sin, which, according to Catholic doctrine, causes eternal damnation. Over the centuries following Gregory, theologians and other Christians then developed the doctrine regarding purgatory, leading to the definition of the formal doctrine (as distinct from the legendary descriptions found in poetic literature) at the First Council of Lyon (1245), the Second Council of Lyon (1274), the Council of Florence (1438–1445), and the Council of Trent (1545–63). All these Councils were part of the Western Church, and this topic was never addressed by the Seven Ecumenical Councils, which are the basis for Orthodox Church teaching. Thus the Roman Catholic Church doctrine of Purgatory developed much later than the Early Church teachings, and its connection to the Early Church are not solid.

The Importance of Moses and the Prophets

In his torment, the rich man was remorseful and begged that his five brothers might be warned by Lazarus rising from the dead so that they might not find themselves in his predicament. Abraham stated that this would do no good (Luke 16:25-31). Throughout the Scriptures we are told that if a person sees and obeys Scripture, he will be saved. Thus, Isaiah warned the people not to listen to mediums and wizards, false sources of spiritual enlightenment, but to hear the Law and the Prophets (Isaiah 8:19-20). He insisted that every word of Scripture is spoken by God (Isaiah 34:16).

But the Apostle John and the Lord tell us how Scripture saves us: not by our obeying the letter of the Law, but by obeying the spirit of the Law (Matthew 22:37-40; Matthew 5:18), which brings us to Christ. That is, Moses himself accuses those who reject the Lord (John 5:39-40, 45-47); he is read in every synagogue, on every Sabbath, throughout many generations (Acts 15:21). Those in Berea are commended for honestly searching the Scriptures, leading them to faith in Christ (Acts 17:11-22). The Apostle Paul also says that the purpose of Scripture is to lead us to Christ and equip us for good works (2 Timothy 3:15-17). Faith itself is a gift (Ephesians 2:9); the written word is the chief visible means by which God gives us this gift of faith.

In the story of our Gospel lesson, Abraham stated that those who refused to heed these sacred writings would not believe even when confronted with someone rising from death (Luke 16:31). This was demonstrated by the chief priests who sought to kill Lazarus after he had been raised from the dead (John 12:10-11).

Living in Luxury Can Be Dangerous

Luxury and wealth can be a siren call that lulls us into thinking all is well when it really isn't. This is the trap, organized by the demons, that Dives fell into, and he never got out. If we always have a picture of hell before us, it will be less likely that we will fall into that trap. In this sense, wealth is like a snake that can coil around the hand that owns it and bite unexpectedly. On the other hand, virtue is much more valuable than wealth. This is why many people over the ages have given their wealth to the poor such that they might have treasure in heaven (Luke 18:22). By doing this, people have stored up their treasure in the age to come. From this point of view, wealth can be like a runaway, thankless servant; if we chain him up, he will still run away and drag his chains after him. A better way to look at wealth is that it is not our own, and that even our children are not our own. Both are gifts from God that we are given to use for His benefit. This was the accusation against Dives: he didn't use any of his wealth to help Lazarus.

While the study and contemplation of hell and eternal punishment may be difficult to bear and even frightening to consider, there are good purposes for doing so. As John Chrysostom said<sup>49</sup>, if we fear hell, we won't fall into it.

“None of those who have hell before their eyes will fall into hell. No one of those who belittle hell will escape hell. If the Ninevites had not feared destruction, they would have been overthrown; but because they feared, they were not overthrown. If in the time of Noah, they had feared the deluge, they would not have been drowned. Nothing is so profitable as to converse concerning hell. It renders our souls purer than any silver. For hear the prophet saying, ‘Your judgments were always before me’ (Psalm 18:22). But when we are about to come before the Judgment-seat of Christ, it will be too late to entreat the Judge. And yet He grants a long season of forbearance. He does not snatch us away in the midst of our sins but permits us time to put them off”.

Clement of Alexandria pointed out<sup>50</sup> the danger of wealth, if our wealth is not stored above in heaven. Wealth is like a snake that will coil around the hand that owns it and bite, even if we know how to use the wealth. Virtue is much more valuable than wealth; he who can give up his worldly goods to the poor finds imperishable treasure.

“Riches are then to be partaken of rationally, bestowed lovingly, not sordidly, or pompously. The love of the beautiful is not to be turned into self-love and ostentation; lest perchance someone say to us, ‘His horse, or land, or domestic, or gold, is worth fifteen talents<sup>51</sup>; but the man himself is only worth three copper coins”.

“Take away, then, the ornaments from women, and domestics from masters, and you will find masters in no respect different from the slaves that they bought. They walk the same, look the same, and speak the same; so alike are they to their slaves. But they differ in that they are feebler than their slaves and have a sicklier upbringing.”

“This best of maxims, then, ought to be perpetually repeated, ‘That the good man, being temperate and just’, treasures up his wealth in heaven. He who has sold his worldly goods, and given them to the poor, finds the imperishable treasure. ‘Do not lay up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust destroy and where thieves break in and steal’ (Matthew 6:19). Blessed truly is he, ‘though he be insignificant, feeble, and obscure’; he is truly rich with the greatest of all riches.

‘Though a man, then, is richer than Cinyras<sup>52</sup> and Midas<sup>53</sup> and is wicked’ and haughty as he who was luxuriously clothed in purple and fine linen and despised Lazarus (Luke 16:19-21), he is miserable, and lives in trouble, and shall not live. Wealth seems to me to be like a serpent, which will twist round the hand and bite; unless one knows how to lay hold of it without danger by the point of the tail. And riches, wriggling either in an experienced or inexperienced grasp, are dexterous at adhering and biting; unless one despises them, uses them skillfully, so as to crush the creature by the charm of the Word, he won’t escape unscathed.”

“But, as is reasonable, he alone, who possesses what is worth most, turns out truly rich, though not recognized as such. It is not jewels, gold, clothing, or beauty of person, that are of high value, but virtue; which is the Word given by the Instructor to be put in practice. This is the Word, who renounces luxury, but calls self-help as a servant, and praises frugality, the progeny of temperance. ‘Receive my instruction, and not silver, and knowledge rather than choice gold; for wisdom is better than rubies, and all the things one may desire cannot be compared with her’ (Proverbs 8:10-11). Again: ‘It is better to have my fruit than to have gold and precious stones; and my produce is better than choice silver’” (Proverbs 8:19 LXX).

John Chrysostom stated<sup>54</sup> that some people are rich in this present age, while others are rich in the world to come. The rich man who despised Lazarus became the poorest of mankind; when he sought to obtain just a drop of water, he did not get possession even of that, to such extreme poverty had he come. Wealth is like a runaway, thankless servant, having no fidelity; should you throw over him ten thousand chains, he will run off dragging his chains after him. What can be more wretched than men devoted to this?

“Command those who are rich in this present age not to be haughty, nor to trust in uncertain riches but in the living God’ (1 Timothy 6:17). When he says, ‘the rich in this present age’, he makes it clear, that there are others who are rich, that is, in the world to come. Such was that Lazarus, poor as to the present life, but rich as to the future; not in gold and silver, and such like perishable and transitory store of wealth; but in those unutterable good things: ‘which eye has not seen, nor ear heard, nor have entered into the heart of man the things which God has prepared for those who love Him’ (1 Corinthians 2:9). For this is true wealth and opulence, when there is good unmixed, and not subject to any change. Not such was the case of that rich man who despised Lazarus, but he became the poorest of mankind. Afterwards when he sought to obtain but a drop of water, he did not get possession even of that, to such extreme poverty had he come. For this reason, he calls them rich ‘in the present age’, to teach you that along with the present life, worldly wealth is annihilated. It goes no further, neither does it change its place with its migrating possessors, but it often leaves them before their end. Therefore, he shows by saying, ‘Neither trust in uncertain riches’; for nothing is so faithless as wealth. Wealth is a runaway, thankless servant, having no fidelity; should you throw over him ten thousand chains, he will run off dragging his chains after him. Frequently those who have possessed wealth shut him up with bars and doors, placing their slaves round about for guards. But he has persuaded over these very servants and has fled away together with his guards; dragging his keepers after him like a chain, so little security was there in this custody. What then can be more faithless than this? What can be more wretched than men devoted to it? When men endeavor with all eagerness to collect so frail and fleeting a thing, they do not hear what the Psalmist Korah said: 'Woe unto them who trust in their wealth and boast in the multitude of their riches. None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him' (Psalm 49:6-7). Tell me why is this woe pronounced? 'Surely every man walks about like a shadow; surely they busy themselves in vain. He heaps up riches and does not know who will gather them' (Psalm 39:6). The labor is certain, but the enjoyment uncertain. Very often you toil and endure trouble for enemies. The inheritance of your wealth after your decease, coming as it does, in many instances, to those who have injured you, and plotted against you in a thousand ways. You are assigned the sins for acquiring the wealth, but the enjoyment of it goes to others!

John Chrysostom also stated<sup>55</sup> that our wealth and our children are not our own. Just as our bodies are not our own, since we have been bought with a price, so our children are His servants also. Our wealth is a gift He has given to us to help our fellow servants. This was the charge brought against Dives, that he didn't use his wealth to help Lazarus.

"Let us lead strict lives; and we shall gain two of the greatest advantages. First, we shall be thankful both when we have and when we are bereaved; and we shall not be enslaved to things which are fleeting by, and things not our own. For whether it is wealth that He takes, He has taken but His own; or honor, or glory, or the body, or the life itself. If He takes away your son, it is not your son that He has taken, but His own servant. We didn't form him, but He made him. We just served at our son's appearing; the whole was God's own work. Let us give thanks therefore that we have been counted worthy to be His servants in this matter. But what? Did you want to have him forever? This again proves you are holding a grudge and are ignorant that it was another's child which you had, and not your own. As those who part with resignation are aware that they have what was not theirs; so, whoever gives way to grief is in fact counting the King's property as his own. For, if we are not our own, how can our children be ours? For in two ways we are His, both on account of our creation, and also on account of the Faith. Therefore, David said, 'And now what is my expectation? Is it not the Lord? And my ground of hope is with You' (Psalm 39:7 LXX). David also said, 'I will praise You, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made. Marvelous are Your works, and that my soul knows very well' (Psalm 139:14). And Luke too, 'For in Him we live and move and have our being' (Acts 17:28). Plying the argument about the Faith, Paul says, 'Do you not know that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit who is in you, whom you have from God, and you are not your own? For you were bought at a price' (1 Corinthians 6:19-20). For all things are God's. When then He calls and chooses to take, let us not, like grudging servants, fly off the handle, or steal our Master's goods. Your soul is not yours; how can your wealth be yours? How is it then that you spend on what is unnecessary the things which are not yours? Do you not know that for this we are soon to be put on our trial, that is, if we have used our wealth badly? But seeing that they are not ours but our Master's, it is right to expend them upon our fellow-servants. It is worth considering that the omission of this was the charge brought against that rich man who despised Lazarus (Luke 16:21); and against those also who had not given food to the Lord" (Matthew 25:42).

Blessed Are the Poor

John Chrysostom had a great deal to say about how we should treat the poor. For example: Since poverty is like a furnace (Isaiah 48:10), we can compare the furnace of poverty to the Babylonian furnace into which the three young men were thrown (Daniel 3). Lazarus was like the three young men in the furnace; Dives was like those who worshipped the golden image, since his wealth was his god. Alms for the poor could have helped Dives immensely; instead his wealth became his jailor.

As we treat the poor, so shall we be treated. After death, Dives and Lazarus changed places, except that Dives' new place was much worse than Lazarus' former place. Lazarus' former place was the worst form of poverty, where he was infirm as well as poor. Yet Lazarus never vented a bitter word, and he is blessed forever for this.

It is possible for a soul to be dead before its body dies, and we can get clues of this from the actions of the body. The body may seem to be alive, but if it has no care for virtue, and if it acts no differently than animals, it is already dead. This is what happened to Dives.

Our life here in the flesh is very short compared with Eternity. Most people readily choose a short time of work in order to obtain a long rest. We have no excuse if sloth in our life causes us to draw upon ourselves unutterable punishment

John Chrysostom compared<sup>56</sup> helping the poor to the three young men in the Babylonian furnace, since poverty is also a furnace (Isaiah 48:10). In Babylon, there was a golden idol, where those who refused to worship it were thrown into a furnace. The furnace of poverty is created by those who have the gold and refuse to help the poor. Lazarus came from this furnace of poverty; Dives, who had the gold, refused to help Lazarus, and ended up in torment. Dives was like those who worshipped the golden idol; Lazarus was like the three young men who were protected in the furnace by the Son of God. For us, when we embrace poverty with thankfulness, like the three young men in the furnace rejoiced with thankfulness in the flames, we become like them.

Let us imitate the young men in the Babylonian furnace (Daniel 3). Because now there is also set up a golden image, even the tyranny of Mammon. But let us not pay attention to the timbrel, to the flutes, to the harps (Daniel 3:5-15), nor to the rest of the pomp of riches; though we must fall into a furnace of poverty (Isaiah 48:10), let us choose it, rather than worship that idol. There will be 'in the midst a dew-laden breeze' (Daniel 3:50 LXX<sup>57</sup>). Let us not shudder at hearing of 'a furnace of poverty'. For so too at that time they that fell into the furnace were shown the more glorious, but they that worshipped the image were destroyed<sup>58</sup>. Only then all took place at once, but in this case some part will be accomplished here, some there, some both here and in the day that is to come. For they that have chosen poverty, in order that they might not worship mammon, will be more glorious both here and then, but they that have been rich unjustly here, shall then pay the utmost penalty.

From this furnace Lazarus too went forth, not less glorious than those young men; but the rich man who was in the place of those that worshipped the image, was condemned to hell. For indeed what we have now mentioned was a type of this. In this instance they who fell into the furnace suffered no hurt, but they who sat outside were laid hold of with great fierceness (Daniel 3:22, 3:48 LXX), so likewise shall it be then. The saints walking through the river of fire (Daniel 7:10) shall suffer no pain; they will even appear joyous; but they that have worshipped the image, shall see the fire rest upon them fiercer than any wild beast, and draw them in. So that if anyone disbelieves hell, when he sees this furnace, let him from the things present believe things to come, and fear not the furnace of poverty, but the furnace of sin. For the furnace of sin is flame and torment, but the furnace of poverty is dew and refreshment; and by this stands the devil, by that, angels blowing aside the flame.

These things let them hear that are rich, that are kindling the furnace of poverty. For though they shall not hurt those others, "the dew" coming to their aid; yet themselves will be an easy prey to the flame, which they have kindled with their own hands.

Then, an angel went down with those young men; now, let us condescend with them that are in the furnace of poverty (Isaiah 48:10), and by alms-deeds let us make a "dewy air," and blow the flame quite aside. Let us be partakers of their crowns also; that the flames of hell may likewise be scattered by the voice of Christ saying, 'I was hungry and you gave Me food' (Matthew 25:35). That voice shall then be with us instead of a 'dew-laden breeze' through the midst of the flame. Let us then go down with alms-giving, into the furnace of poverty; let us behold them that in self-restraint walk therein, and trample on the burning coals. Let us behold the marvel, strange and beyond thought, a man singing praise in a furnace, a man giving thanks in fire, chained to extreme poverty yet offering much praise to Christ. They, who bear poverty with thankfulness, really become equal to those young men. For no flame is so terrible as poverty, nor so apt to set us on fire. But those young men were not set on fire; rather, on their giving thanks to the Lord, their bonds too were at once loosed (Daniel 3:23, 92 LXX). So likewise, if when you have fallen into poverty, you are thankful, both the bonds are loosened, and the flame extinguished. If it is not extinguished, what is much more marvelous, it becomes a fountain stead of a flame; which, in Babylon, likewise came to pass, and in the midst of a furnace they enjoyed a pure dew. For the fire indeed was not quenched, but the burning of those cast in it was altogether hindered. This one may see in their case also who live by the rules of wisdom, for they, even in poverty, feel more secure than the rich. Let us not therefore sit down outside the furnace, feeling no pity towards the poor; lest the same befall us as then befell those executioners (Daniel 3:22, 3:48 LXX). For if we should go down to them, and take our stand with the young men, the fire will no longer work us any harm; but if we should sit above and neglect them in the flame of their poverty, the flame will burn us up. Go down therefore into the fire, that we may not be burned up by the fire; do not sit down outside the fire, lest the flame catch hold of us. If it should find us among the poor, it will depart from us; but if alienated from them, it will run upon us quickly, and catch us. Do not therefore stand off from them that are cast in. But when the devil gives command to cast them that have not worshipped gold into the furnace of poverty, do not be one of them that cast others in. But associate with those that are cast in; that we may be of the number of the saved, and not of the burned.

John Chrysostom also stated<sup>59</sup> that alms for the poor is a medicine that can cleanse and quench all sin. Zacchaeus is a good example of this. This was also an important item in Paul's work with all the Churches. Alms can be given by deeds as well as by money, such as a physician or a counselor volunteering his/her time. If we see someone possessed with the love of money, we can try to quench his fire and warn him of the Judgment to come. In fact, he is in prison where his wealth is his jailor. If he refuses to listen to us, he shall bear the blame himself. We see people all the time who are naked and strangers, for they are naked and a stranger to heaven. We can bring them to our own inn and clothe them with the garment of virtue. When confronted with this, many people say, "Pray for me!" In saying this, they are admitting that they are naked and beggars just as Dives was in the flames of Hades.

"For great impieties can there be pardon? Yes. There is no sin, which alms cannot cleanse; none, which alms cannot quench; all sin is beneath this; it is a medicine adapted for every wound. What is worse than a publican? The very matter of his occupation is altogether one of injustice; and yet Zacchaeus washed away all these sins. Notice how even Christ shows this, by the care taken to have a purse, and to bear the contributions put into it (John 12:6). And Paul also says, 'They desired only that we should remember the poor, the very thing which I also was eager to do' (Galatians 2:10); everywhere the Scripture has much to say concerning this matter. 'A man's own wealth is the ransom of his soul: but the poor endures not threatening' (Proverbs 13:8); and with reason; for Christ said, 'If you want to be perfect, go, sell what you have and give to the poor, and you will have treasure in heaven; and come, follow<sup>60</sup> Me' (Matthew 19:21). This may well be part of perfection. But alms may be done not only by money, but by deeds. For example: one may kindly stand by a person to aid and defend him; one may reach to him a helping hand; the service rendered by deeds has often done more good even than money. Let us set to work all the different kinds of almsgiving. Can you give alms by money? Don't be slack! Can you give alms by good offices? Do not say, 'because I have no money, this is nothing I can do'. This is a very great point; look on your deeds as if you had given gold. Can you do it by kind attention? Do this also. For instance, if you were a physician, give your skill; for this also is a great matter. Can you by counsel? This service is much greater than all. For in so doing you put away not starvation, but a grievous death. With such alms the Apostles above measure abounded: therefore, it was that the distribution of money they put into the hands of those after them, themselves exhibiting the mercy shown by words. Do you think it is small alms, to a lost, castaway soul, a soul in uttermost jeopardy, possessed by a burning fever, to be able to rid it of its disease? For example, do you see one possessed by love of money? Pity the man. Is he in danger of suffocation? Quench his fire. 'What if he will not be persuaded?' Do your part and don't be remiss. Have you seen him in bonds? For wealth is indeed bonds (Matthew 25:34-36). Go to him; visit him; console him; try to release him of his bonds. If he refuses, he shall bear the blame himself. Have you seen him naked, and a stranger? For he is indeed naked, and a stranger to heaven. Bring him to your own inn; clothe him with the garment of virtue; give him the city which is in heaven. 'What if I myself am naked?', you might say. Clothe yourself first; if you know that you are naked, assuredly you know that you need to be clothed; if you know what sort of nakedness this is. What numbers of women now wear silken apparel but are indeed naked of the garments of virtue! Let their husbands clothe these women. 'But they will not admit those garments; they choose to have the silk ones'. Then do this also first; induce them to have a longing for those garments of virtue; show them that they are naked; speak to them of judgment to come. Answer me, what is the clothing we shall need there? If you will bear with me, I also will show you this nakedness. He that is naked, when it is cold, shrinks and shudders, and stands there cowering, and with his arms folded; but in the summer heat, not so. If then I shall prove to you that your rich men, and rich women, the more they put on, the more naked they are, do not take it wrong. How then, I ask you, when we raise the subject of hell-fire, and of the torments there, do not these shrink and shudder more than those naked ones? Do they not bitterly groan and condemn themselves? When they come to this or that man, and say to him, 'Pray for me', do they not speak the same words as those naked beggars? Now indeed, after all that we can say, the nakedness is not yet apparent; but it will be plain enough there. How, and in what way? When these silken garments and precious stones shall have perished, and it shall be only by the garments of virtue and of vice that all men are shown, when the poor shall be clad with exceeding glory, but the rich, naked and in disgraceful sort, shall be carried away to their punishments! What was more naked than that rich man who arrayed himself in purple? What was poorer than Lazarus? Then which of them uttered the words of beggars? Which of them was in abundance? If one should deck his house with an abundance of tapestry, and himself sit naked inside, what would be the benefit? So, it is in the case of these women. Truly, the house of the soul, the body I mean, they hang round with plenty of garments; but the mistress of the house sits naked inside. Lend me the eyes of the soul, and I will show you the soul's nakedness. For what is the garment of the soul? Virtue, of course. And what its nakedness? Vice! For just as if one were to strip any decent person, that person would be ashamed, and would shrink and cower out of sight. Just so the soul, if we wish to see it; the soul which doesn't have these garments blushes for shame."

<sup>60</sup> Jesus was offering the life of an Apostle to the rich young synagogue ruler (Luke 18:18-30), but the young ruler turned Jesus down because he preferred his wealth.

John Chrysostom further pointed out<sup>61</sup> that as we treat the poor, so shall we be treated. If we get angry with them or laugh at them because of their poverty, there may come a time at the Last Judgment when we are in their place begging God for mercy. As we have done, so it will be done to us. Dives had this same interaction when he saw Lazarus across the "great gulf" and asked for a drop of water. The result was that Dives and Lazarus switched places, except Dives' new state was much worse than Lazarus' old state was.

"With respect to alms-giving, let us pity our fellow-men; let us not, I entreat, neglect them when perishing with hunger. How can it be otherwise than inappropriate, that we should sit at the table laughing and enjoying ourselves, when we hear others wailing as they pass through the street, and we don't even turn at their cries. Why should we get angry with them, and call them 'cheat'? 'What do we mean? Does anyone plan to cheat for a single loaf of bread?' 'Yes', said someone. Then in this case above all let him be pitied; in this case above all let him be delivered from his need. Or if you don't intend to give, don't insult either; if you will not save the wreck, don't thrust it into the gulf. Consider, when you thrust away the poor man who comes to you, who you will be when you call on God. He said, 'With the measure you use, it will be measured back to you' (Matthew 7:2). Consider how he departs, crushed, bowed down, lamenting; besides his poverty having received also the blow from your insolence. If you count the begging a curse, think what a tempest it makes for the poor man; he begs, but gets nothing, and goes away insulted. How long shall we be like wild beasts, and violate nature through greediness? Many people groan at these words; but I desire them always to have this feeling of compassion. Think of that day when we shall stand before the judgment-seat of Christ, when we shall beg for mercy, and Christ will bring them forward. He shall say, 'For the sake of a single loaf, of a single obol<sup>62</sup>, so great a surge did you raise in these souls!' What shall we reply? What defense shall we make? To show that He will bring them forward, hear what He said, 'Inasmuch as you did not do it to one of the least of these, you did not do it to Me' (Matthew 25:45). They will no more say anything to us, but God on their behalf will upbraid us. Since the rich man saw Lazarus too, and Lazarus said nothing to him, but Abraham spoke for him; thus, it will be in the case of the poor who are now despised by us. We shall not see them stretching out their hands in pitiful state but being in rest; and we shall take the state which was theirs (except much more grievous) as a punishment. The rich man didn't desire to be filled with crumbs 'there', but was scorched and tormented sharply, and was told, 'remember that in your lifetime you received your good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things' (Luke 16:25). Let us not then deem wealth any great thing; it will only help us on our way to punishment, if we don't pay attention. Conversely, if we pay attention, poverty also becomes to us an addition of enjoyment and rest. For we put off our sins if we bear it with thankfulness plus we gain great boldness before God".

John Chrysostom noted<sup>63</sup> that Lazarus was affected by the bitterest form of poverty, where he was infirm as well as having no one to look out for him. In his face several times each day were the excesses of Dives, where the parasites and flatterers of Dives were pampered beyond their need, while Lazarus couldn't even get a few crumbs from Dives' table. The point is that none of these things injured Lazarus; he never vented a bitter word; he was superior to all of them. He endured this trial bravely and with much fortitude.

“But poverty, someone will say, disposes men to be discontented and often to utter profane words, and condescend to mean actions. It is not poverty which does this, but littleness of soul. For Lazarus also was very poor, and besides poverty he suffered from infirmity, a bitterer trial than any form of poverty, and one which makes poverty more severely felt. In addition to infirmity there was a total absence of protectors, and difficulty in finding any to supply his wants, which increased the bitterness of poverty and infirmity. For each of these things is painful in itself, but when there are none to minister to the sufferer's wants, the suffering becomes greater, the flame more painful, the distress more bitter, the tempest fiercer, the billows stronger, the furnace hotter. And if one examines the case thoroughly there was yet a fourth trial besides these — the unconcern and luxury of the rich man who dwelt nearby. If you would find a fifth thing, serving as fuel to the flame, you will see quite clearly that he was upset by it. For not only was that rich man living luxuriously, but several times in the day he saw the poor man; for he had been laid at his gate, being a grievous spectacle of pitiful distress, and the bare sight of him was sufficient to soften even a heart of stone. Yet even this did not induce that unmerciful man to assist this case of poverty. He had his luxurious table spread, goblets wreathed with flowers, pure wine plentifully poured, grand armies of cooks, parasites and flatterers from early dawn, troops of singers, cupbearers, and jesters. He spent all his time in devising every kind of dissipation, drunkenness, and in reveling in dress and feasting. But although he saw that poor man every day distressed by grievous hunger, the bitterest infirmity, the oppression of his many sores, by destitution, and the ills which result from these things, he never even gave him a thought. Yet the parasites and the flatterers were pampered even beyond their need; but the poor man, encompassed with so many miseries, was not even granted the crumbs which fell from that table. Yet none of these things injured him, he did not give vent to a bitter word, he did not utter profane speech; but he acted like a piece of gold which shines all the more brilliantly when it is purified by excessive heat. Although oppressed by these sufferings, he was superior to all of them, and to the agitation which in many cases is produced by them. Generally speaking poor men are consumed with envy and racked by malicious ill-will, when they see rich men; they deem life not worth living, and this even when they are well supplied with necessary food. What would the condition of this poor man have been had he not been very wise and noble hearted, seeing that he was poor beyond all other poor men, and not only poor but also infirm. He was without anyone to protect or cheer him; he lay in the midst of the city as if in a remote desert; he wasted away with bitter hunger, and saw all good things being poured on the rich man as out of a fountain. He didn't have the benefit of any human consolation but lay exposed as a perpetual meal for the tongues of the dogs, for he was so enfeebled and broken down in body that he could not scare them away. Do you perceive that he who does not injure himself suffers no evil?”

“For what harm was done to this hero by his bodily infirmity? Or by the absence of protectors? Or by the coming of the dogs? Or the evil proximity of the rich man with his great luxury, haughtiness and arrogance? Did it weaken him on behalf of virtue? Did it ruin his fortitude? Nowhere was he harmed at all, but that multitude of sufferings, and the cruelty of the rich man, rather increased his strength, and became the pledge for him of infinite crowns of victory. It was a means of adding to his rewards, an augmentation of his recompense, and a promise of an increased return. He was crowned not merely on account of his poverty, his hunger, his sores, or the dogs licking them. Having such a neighbor as the rich man, and being seen by him every day, and perpetually overlooked, he endured this trial bravely and with much fortitude. It was a trial which added no small flame, but in fact a very strong one to the furnace of poverty” (Isaiah 48:10).

John Chrysostom took a look at<sup>64</sup> what the soul is like when it departs from God. We can see signs of the soul’s life by looking at the body. It may seem to be alive, but it may already be dead. When the soul has no care for virtue, but is grasping and transgresses the Law, it acts no differently than beasts. Dives had a dead soul, and this is obvious from what he did. He ate, drank and lived for pleasure only, just like the unmerciful and the cruel. Lazarus, however, wrestled with continual hunger, but he uttered no blasphemy against God, but endured everything nobly. If the demons can fall on a soul, striking and biting it, but it has no sense that this is happening, that soul is like a dead body that doesn’t even feel this.

“Christ would like us to contribute something to our salvation from ourselves. Let us then contribute and preserve the life of the soul. What is life in a soul, we can learn from the body. For the body, we affirm it is alive, when it moves with a healthy kind of motion; but when it lies prostrate and powerless, or its motions are disorderly, though it retain the semblance of life or motion, such a life is more grievous than any death. Should it utter nothing sane but words of the crazy, and see one object instead of another, such a man again is more pitiful than those who are dead. Similarly, the soul, when it has no healthiness, though it retains a semblance of life, is dead. When it does not see gold as gold but as something great and precious; when it doesn’t think of the future but crawls on the ground; when it does one thing in place of another. How is it clear that we have a soul? Is it not from its operations? When it does not perform the things proper to it, is it not dead? When, for instance, it has no care for virtue, but is grasping and transgresses the law; how can I tell that you have a soul? Because you walk? But even the irrational creatures do this as well. Because you eat and drink? But even the wild beasts do this. Well then, because you stand upright on two feet? This convinces me rather that you are a beast in human form. For when you resemble beasts in all other respects, but not in its manner of erecting itself, you do the more disturb and terrify me. I the more consider that which I see to be a monster. If I were to see a beast speaking with the voice of a man, I should not for that reason say it was a man, but even for that very reason a beast more monstrous than a beast. How then can I learn that you have the soul of a man, when you kick like the donkey, when you bear malice like the camel, when you bite like the bear, when you devour like the wolf, when you steal like the fox, when you are wily as the serpent, when you are shameless as the dog? How can I learn that you have the soul of a man? Would you like me to show you a dead soul and a living soul? Let us turn the conversation back to those men of old; and, if you will, let us set before us the rich man in the story of Lazarus, and we shall know what death in a soul is. He had a dead soul, and it is plain from what he did. Of the works of the soul he did not one but ate, drank and lived in pleasure only. Such are the unmerciful and the cruel, for these too have a dead soul as he had. All the warmth that flows out of the love of our neighbor had been spent, and it was deader than a lifeless body. But the poor man was not such but standing on the very summit of heavenly wisdom shone out. Though wrestling with continual hunger, and not even supplied with the food that was necessary, he spoke of no blasphemy against God, but endured all nobly. Now this is no trifling work of the soul; but a very high proof that it is well-strung and healthful. When these qualities are not present, it is plainly because the soul is dead that they have perished. Shall we not pronounce that soul dead which the Devil falls upon, striking, biting, spurning it, yet it has no sense of any of these things, but lies deadened and doesn't grieve when being robbed of its wealth? When the devil leaps on it, and it remains unmoved, it is like a body when the soul has departed and doesn't even feels it!"

John Chrysostom summarized<sup>65</sup> our life in this age with our life in Eternity. Our life here is a short time of work compared to endless ages. In worldly matters, most people readily choose a brief time of work in order to obtain a long rest, even though this often doesn't happen the way they plan it. What excuse shall we have if we draw upon ourselves unutterable punishment just due to sloth in this life? Dives lived his whole life in sloth, when he could easily have left the crumbs from his table for poor Lazarus every day. Anything we endure in this age is just a shadow compared to the torments of the age to come.

"Let us not abuse God's long-suffering for a single moment, for such is this present life. If we live luxuriously, we draw on ourselves punishment through endless ages; but let us work for a moment, that we may be crowned forever. Notice that even in worldly things most men act in this manner; they choose brief work in order to obtain a long rest, even though the opposite often falls out to them! In this life there is an equal portion of work and reward; often, the work seems endless while the fruit is little, or not even a little. In the case of the kingdom of God conversely, the labor is little while the pleasure is great and boundless. For consider: the farmer who wearies himself the whole year through, and at the very end of his hope misses the fruit of those many labors. The shipmaster and the soldier, until extreme old age, are occupied with wars and labors. Often each of them has departed this life, the one with the loss of his wealthy cargoes, the other, along with victory, of life itself. What excuse then shall we have, if in worldly matters we prefer what is laborious in order that we may rest for a little? In spiritual things, if we do the converse of this, we draw upon ourselves unutterable punishment for a little sloth. Therefore, I beseech you all to recover from this frenzy. None shall deliver us in that day; neither brother, father, child, friend, neighbor, nor any other; if our works show us false, all will be over and we will perish. How many lamentations did that rich man make when he besought the Patriarch Abraham and begged that Lazarus might be sent! But listen to what Abraham said to him: 'Between us and you there is a great gulf fixed, so that those who want to pass from here to you cannot, nor can those from there pass to us' (Luke 16:26). How many petitions did those virgins make to their fellows for a little oil! But listen to what they said; 'No, lest there should not be enough for us and you; but go rather to those who sell and buy for yourselves' (Matthew 25:9). And no one was able to bring them into the bridal chamber. Thinking then on these things let us also be careful of that which is our life. For mention all the work and bring forward besides all the punishment; all these combined will be nothing in comparison to the good things to come. Consider therefore, if you will, fire, steel and wild beasts, and if there is anything worse than these; but yet these are not even a shadow compared with those torments."

Example of priest who prayed for the departed faithfully, even though he was not very devout in other things. Where were the people he was praying for? Look this up!

APPENDIX A

Descriptions of Hell in the Scriptures

Words Used to Describe Hell

Hebrew

Sheol (7585): Hades, implying a subterranean location

Shakhat (7845): a pit or a trap used figuratively implying destruction

Abaddon (11): destruction, from the verb “to wander away”

Greek

Hades (86): lit. The unseen; in Greek Mythology, the subterranean abode of the dead corresponding to the Hebrew Sheol (Compare Philippians 2:10, Ephesians 4:9)

Tartaros (5020): In Greek Mythology, the deepest abyss in Hades for the worst offenders

Abussos (12): From negative participle plus buthos = sea; implies the ocean bottom and below; abyss. Note that in Revelation 21:1 there is no more sea.

Phrear (5421): a hole in the ground; a pit. Used to describe a shaft leading to the abyss

Gehenna (1067): Gay-Hinnom; Valley of Hinnom, a smoldering garbage dump outside Jerusalem. Besides trash, the Valley of Hinnom also included the effluent of all the latrines in Jerusalem

Limnen tou puros (3041 & 4442): Lake of Fire

Passages Describing Hell

Deuteronomy 32:21-22 – Sheol, as a subterranean place, includes fire

Isaiah 66:21-24 – For those in Sheol, their worm (lit. maggot) will not die and their fire shall not be quenched. This passage is amplified in Revelation 20-22, and is quoted in Mark 9:42-48

Job 33:17-18 – Sheol and shakhat are sometimes used together to imply hell

Proverbs 15:11 – Sheol and abaddon are also used together to imply hell

Job 31:12 – Fire is also associated with abaddon

Acts 2:27, 31 – In the Nicean Creed, we say that Jesus descended into hell. Here we see one place where that statement comes from: Jesus was not left in Hades.

Revelation 20:13-14 – The sea, death and Hades gave up the dead in them for judgment. Then, death and Hades were thrown into the Lake of Fire and there was no more sea.

2 Peter 2:4 – God did not spare the angels who sinned but consigning to Tartarus delivered (them) in chains of gloom. They were being watched and guarded awaiting judgment.

Revelation 9:1-4 – A star fell from heaven and was given the key to the shaft (Gk phrear) of the abyss (abussos). Out of the shaft came smoke like from a great furnace and from the smoke came locusts (or demons) to torment unbelievers. Perhaps these are the ones consigned to “Tartarus” in 2 Peter 2:4.

Genesis 7:11 – (Septuagint) In the Greek rendering of the Old Testament (200 BC), it was the fountains of the great abyss (abussos) that burst open to create the major source of the flood water. Even today, the ocean bottoms are referred to as the “abyssal plains” (National Geographic World Atlas).

Matthew 13:41-43 – This is the conclusion of the parable of the Wheat and the Tares. Here Hell is described as a furnace where there will be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

Jude 13 – Here hell is described as “the black darkness.”

What is Abraham’s Bosom?

The Greek word for bosom, kolpos, is similar to the English word bosom and implies more than just physical anatomy.

John 13:23 – John leaned on Jesus’ bosom at the Last Supper. Here physical anatomy is obvious.

John 1:18 – The Only Begotten Son is in the bosom of the Father. More than physical anatomy is implied: “bosom” here implies a true oneness.

Luke 6:38 – The reward for generosity is “good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over will be put into your bosom.” This is not an allusion to some type of trash compactor. “Bosom” here implies generally things within one’s control or possession.

Thus, Abraham’s bosom in our Gospel lesson implies (1) a oneness of Lazarus with Abraham and (2) a place that is under Abraham’s control as one of the Patriarchs of the Faith.

Luke 13:27-29 – A further aspect of Abraham’s bosom is the gathering of the Patriarchs, the Prophets, the saints and the righteous in the Kingdom of God. With the eyes of faith in the Liturgy, we can get a tiny glimpse of this as we look through the windows of heaven (icons).

All this represents a bewildering array of terms: Hades, the abyss, the Lake of Fire, Abraham’s bosom, heaven. There is a mystery to this that we won’t know until the Lord returns. Just as the New Jerusalem is the place prepared for the righteous (Revelation 21:2, John 14:2-34), so hell (in its various descriptive terms) is the place prepared for the devil and his legions (Matthew 25:41, 2 Peter 2:4) and for the ungodly (Jude 13, 2 Peter 1:17). We are told hell will consist of darkness, flame, weeping and gnashing of teeth, and that it will not be part of the New Jerusalem, but will be outside (Revelation 22:15, 14:9-11, Isaiah 66:24). But how can Hades, much less death, be thrown into the Lake of Fire? This suggests that Hades (and consequently Abraham's bosom) are temporary abodes and that the Lake of Fire and the New Jerusalem are the final destinations. To consider such merely adds to the mystery.

APPENDIX B

Another View of the Soul after Death

Gregory of Nyssa, along with Macrina, the sister of Basil the Great, presented another view<sup>66</sup> of how the soul lives after the death of the body. This other view looks at the Scriptures in a more spiritual way and spiritualizes statements that we might normally interpret in a physical way.

1. The soul is “simple and uncompounded” and survives death including the dissolution of the composite body, whose scattered elements it will continue to accompany, as if watching over its property till the Resurrection, when it will clothe itself in them anew.
2. The soul is “an intellectual being.”
3. Hades is not a particular spot; it means the Invisible; those passages in the Bible in which the regions under the earth are alluded to are explained as allegorical.
4. Regarding the Rich Man and Lazarus: both were in the grave; and so all that is said of them is in a spiritual sense. But the soul can suffer still, being cognizant, not only of the elements of the whole body, but of those that formed each member, e. g. the tongue. By the relations of the Rich Man are meant the impressions made on his soul by the things of flesh and blood.
5. The degree of pain which must be endured by each one is necessarily proportioned to the measure of the wickedness.
6. What sort of eyes has the Rich Man to lift up in hell, when he has left his bodily eyes in that tomb? How can a disembodied spirit feel any flame? What sort of tongue can he crave to be cooled with the drop of water, when he has lost his tongue of flesh? What is the finger that is to convey to him this drop? What sort of place is the “bosom” of repose? The bodies of both of them are in the tomb, and their souls are disembodied, and do not consist of parts either. So, it is impossible to make the framework of the narrative correspond with the truth, if we understand it literally; we can do that only by translating each detail into an equivalent in the world of ideas. Thus, we must think of the gulf as that which parts ideas which may not be confounded from running together, not as a chasm of the earth. Such a chasm, however vast it was, could be traversed with no difficulty by a disembodied intelligence; since intelligence can in no time be wherever it will.
7. God divided the life of man into two parts, namely, this present life, and that “out of the body” hereafter; and He placed on the first a limit of the briefest possible time, while He prolonged the other into eternity. In His love for man He gave him his choice, to have the one or the other of those things, good or evil, I mean, in which of the two parts he liked: either in this short and transitory life, or in those endless ages, whose limit is infinity. Some soon use up on gluttony in this fleshly life the dividend of good which their constitution can claim, and they reserve none of it for the afterlife. But those who by a discreet and sober-minded calculation economize the powers of living are afflicted by things painful to sense here, but they reserve their good for the succeeding life, and so their happier lot is lengthened out to last as long as that eternal life. This, in my opinion, is the “gulf”; which is not made by the parting of the earth, but by those decisions in this life which result in a separation into opposite characters. This is the reason, I think, that the name of “Abraham’s bosom” is given to that good situation of the soul in which Scripture makes the athlete of endurance repose. Abraham purchased future blessedness by present annoyance. Meanwhile the denial of these blessings, which they witness, becomes in the others a flame, which burns the soul and causes the craving for the refreshment of one drop out of that ocean of blessings wherein the saints are affluent; which nevertheless they do not get. If one, then, thinks of those atoms in which each detail of the body potentially inheres, and surmises that Scripture means a “finger” and a “tongue” and an “eye” and the rest as existing, after dissolution, only in the sphere of the soul, one will not miss the probable truth. Moreover, if each detail carries the mind away from a material acceptance of the story, surely the “hell” which we have just been speaking of cannot reasonably be thought a place so named; rather we are there told by Scripture about a certain unseen and immaterial situation in which the soul resides.

8. What then, I asked, is the doctrine here? Why, seeing that Lazarus’ soul is occupied with his present blessings and turns around to look at nothing that he has left, while the rich man is still attached, with a cement as it were, even after death, to the life of feeling, which he does not divest himself of even when he has ceased to live, still keeping as he does flesh and blood in his thoughts. For in his entreaty that his kindred may be exempted from his sufferings he plainly shows that he is not freed yet from fleshly feeling.
